It regulates the Bowels, quiets the nerves, and gives such a healthy tone to the whole system as to soon make the invalid feel like a new person.
Its operation is not violent, but is characterized by great gentleness; the patient experiences no sudden change, no marked results, but gradually his troubles

All railway, steamboat and hotel managers will confer a favor upon us by demanding credentials of every person claiming to represent our journal, as we have information that several "humbugs" are seeking courtesies in the name of the PRESS, and we have no disposition to be, even passively, a party to such frauds.

We do not read anonymous letters and communications. The name and address of the writer are in all cases indispensable, not necessarily for publication but as a guaranty of good faith.

The MacMahon Monarchy.

Whoever takes an interest in current public events must be struck with the anomalous attitude or rather attitudes of the French government as indicated by Marshal MacMahon and the Assembly. Ostensibly the government is republican. Practically, it is an absolute monarchy, with President MacMahon as dictator. The Assembly is divided into factions, and has come to be noted for the bitterness of its debates and the uncertainty of its action. Yesterday it essentially voted for its own dissolution. To-day by a decisive vote it resolves to maintain its assumed authority to legislate for millions of people. To-morrow it will reverse its action. One day it votes to enter upon the consideration of the constitutional plans for the permanency of the government, but the next it casts them aside. As a body, it has accomplished but one thing which is stamped with permanency. It evoked MacMahon as a temporary expedient, but to its disgust he is both permanent and prominent. The Assembly may pass away. The so-called President will stand for seven years, for he is backed by the army and has all faith in bayonets but ignores ballots. When elected, Marshal MacMahon declared that he had no policy, and was but the servant of the Assembly. The Bourbons, in order to provide against possible danger of a majority in the Assembly against him, made the Marshal President for seven years. After this act, by degrees he began to cease talking about being the servant of the Assembly and to act on the presumption that he was its master. In time he informed that body that he was President for seven years, and further, that for that period he proposed to be the head of the French people. After trying it, MacMahon has discovered that he has a relish if not an aptness for the chief place. Consequently he wants no monarchy, for that would reduce him to a secondary place. He wants no definitely organized republic, for that would put constitutional restrictions upon his powers. He evidently cares little for law and nothing for the sentiment of the French people. Now he can muzzle the press, control the army, aid the Bourbons in overthrowing the republican government in Spain, and in every respect exercise all the powers of an absolute monarch. The adherents of the cause of Count de Chambord alone have liberty to do as they please. They can openly declare that they will take every means to place that pretender over the French nation and only accept the republic and hold office under it as a means to accomplish it. Such acts by them are not regarded as treason by the present dictator; but let that boy of eighteen, the son of the late Emperor, commonly called the Prince Imperial, set his foot on French soil, and the chances are that he will be tried by a military court and shot by a file of soldiers. The republicans in this curious republic fare little better, for they are watched and frequently punished for utterances hostile to the present rule.

While, however, the present government is maintained in defiance and contempt of the expressed wishes of the French people, there is a degree of relief to be found in the fact that for over six years there will be scarcely any chance for the restoration of either the Bourbons or Bonapartists. To be sure, the world will be reminded of the existence of both, since some writer of Napoleonic French will provide the Prince Imperial with proclamations a la the Empire; and so long as he lives, Count de Chambord will display the white flag of the Bourbons, and, unmindful that we live in the last quarter of the nineteenth century, with painful seriousness, will tell the world that by-the-grace-of-God he is king of France by birth. On the other hand, McMahon is only dictator for seven years by a blunder of an Assembly which can scarcely offer a reason why the building in which its sessions are held should not be declared an insane asylum.

THE Democratic State Committee of Illinois have embodied in their call for a state convention a very good platform; and, so far as the financial question is concerned, it should have been adopted by the Republican instead of its shilly-shally declaration. Whether or not the party at its convention will adopt the resolutions, is another thing. The worst things about these Democrats who make good resolutions is, that they forget them when they get into power, as has been illustrated in New Hampshire and Connecticut.

THE testimony before the Congressional Committee in Arkansas indicates that both parties did all the cheating they could in the election of 1872, and that veracity is not an element essential in political leaders in that state. In these times activity counts, unless there is that lack of method in details which causes the aspirant to send to his beer-vending friend a circular intended for his temperance adherents and vice versa.

THE health of New York city, as estimated from the report of vital statistics, for the week ending July 25th, is exceptionally good among persons above five years of age. But infants are dying at the usual wholesale rates of summer in that city. Bad food and bad air are the chief causes attributed, and the health officers call on parents to take their children to the parks for a while every day and to keep their homes clean.

Current Notes.

Consul-General Seward, now at Shanghai, is reported as about to resign in disgust at not being promoted to the place of minister. It is said that his administration has been a very profitable one to himself.

"We were all reformers" Mrs Stanton says: and therefore there was great frankness on his part. Engaged professionally in the business of making the world as good as themselves it was desirable that they should understand its frailties; and it is easy to understand the zest with which their highly rarefied natures entered into this unwholesome gossip.—Boston Advertiser.

The Democratic State Committee, not being satisfied that Governor Hendricks is entirely dead as a Presidential candidate, have decided to print 100,000 copies of his recent speech for circulation. That will put him out of his misery.—Indiana Sentinel.

New York is thinking of taxing her church property, savings banks and insurance companies. Only $344,000,000 are invested in those institutions in the Empire State.

The Independent of this week has a short minor editorial upon the Beecher scandal, the point of which is found in the following extract: "Mr. Tilton's cross-examination adds nothing of moment to the case, which now depends entirely on the question, answered very differently by different people, whether the published documents, whose genuineness is unimeached, really support Mr. Tilton's charges."

On August 3d an election for county officers and a clerk of the State Supreme Court will be held in Kentucky, and three days later the people of Tennessee will also vote for county officers, and those of North Carolina for Governor and members of Congress and the Legislature.

How indifferent everybody appears to be regarding the Pittsburg disaster. Were 200 lives ever lost in such a way before, and so large a loss of property reported without causing a greater outflow of sympathy? We think not. Has the love of scandal closed up the channels of sympathy and benevolence?—New York Evening Mail.

Raphael Semmes and others whose disabilities were removed upon their application for pardon are up for office as Democratic candidates.

The editor of the Brunswick Telegraph says, apropos of the Bowdoin College discussion, that he is "a mere looker-on in Vienna," which is all right enough, perhaps, only Vienna is not the standard place for mere lookers-on. The Telegraph man should move to Venice at once if he proposes to continue looking on in real classic fashion.

The Albany Journal judges from reading its exchanges that the part of the Congressional address referring to the Windom transportation schemes was not prepared for the eastern market. Correct.

It will be a happy day to this country when a law is enacted to punish suicide as a crime—political suicide we refer to, for the calendar in this respect is filled to overflowing with the names, acts and doings of Democrats. The Indiana Democrats are at present taking a dose of the worst kind of poison, bottled "repudiation," delivered to them by D. Voorhees, Esq, who appears to know his business as a political apothecary.—Washington Chronicle.

John Forsyth, the editor of the Mobile Register, a leading Democratic paper in the South, whose rebel disabilities were removed last winter, mounts his stilts in an article headed "To your tents, oh White Men!" He says:

"To these ward meetings, white men of all classes and degrees—rich and poor, learned and uninstructed—all upon whom nature has conferred a white face and a white blood to be defended from the contamination of miscegenation and the damning disgrace of subordination to race inferiority. We must fight this battle for existence with our whole strength and courage from the first skirmish to the last field day. There must be no holding back and relegation of duty to our neighbors. When the drum beats the assembly, let all turn out and answer to the roll call of white supremacy over the black monkey mimics of civilization, who arrogate superiority over men whom God made their masters."

Congressman Henry L. Dawes is passing his summer vacation at home, busied a share of the time with his practice as a member of the Berkshire bar, and keeping a close eye on the current political news of the day. His health is quite good, this season.—Springfield Union.

The London Telegraph says the Lincoln tower on Rev. Newman Hall's church is the first monument to a foreign ruler ever erected upon English soil, and that a better selection than Abraham Lincoln could not be made as an exception to the old negative rule.

The mistake of those who went for the salary increase is returning to plague them. Mr. Tyner sought renomination in Indiana last week, and encountered such a storm that he withdrew. Mr. Dunnell has compassed a nomination in Minnesota, but his Republican opponents are outspoken, and will probably put up another candidate, leading to his defeat. Gen. Averill, who voted for the increase, and took his money, wants a renomination in the same state, but the opposition is very earnest. It has proved a very costly gain to those who supported it.—Albany Journal.

Our New York Letter.

The Scandal—Reason of Beecher's Delay—Carpenter and his Tattling.

NEW YORK, July 30, 1874.

Lest the apparent procrastination of the Beecher committee, should be construed prejudicially to the cause of the defence, I take occasion to inform the readers of the PRESS that it is attributable solely to the absence of Mr. Moulton. It has been regarded as desirable to maintain the sequence of the case, by hearing all that is to be said in support of the accusation, first. This course is conformable alike to legal usage and practical common sense. Mr. Moulton was one of the earliest to appear before the committee, and he made a somewhat formal speech on that occasion, in which he avowed his purpose to tell the "whole truth" if the investigation was persisted in, intimating with that peculiar air of mystery which has constituted so marked a feature of the entire proceedings of the pursuers, that he was ponderously freighted with information on the subject. He professed the most unbounded affection for Mr. Beecher, but declared that he would not see Tilton "crucified." As soon as the time comes for Mr. Moulton to relieve himself of the secret burden of "truth" which seems necessary for the purpose of the inquiry, he finds it convenient to be absent from the city. This brings the investigation to a temporary stand-still. There are two theories on which Mr. Moulton's departure is accounted for. The one is that finding that Mr. Tilton has already undergone a moral crucifixion he is decidedly averse to subjecting himself to the risks of a similar catastrophe, by attempting to corroborate his allegations. The other is that he is anxious to hold himself in reserve, until the testimony for the defence is exhausted, so that he may have the last word. The committee elect to submit to delay rather than abet a design to which such a suspicion of sinister motive attaches. Whenever Mr. Moulton sees fit to present himself, and comply with the demand of the committee to tell all he knows, Mr. Beecher will close the case, and then, and not till then, the public will be in possession of the points, on which it can form an intelligent judgment of the matter.

But there is one witness so willing to be heard, that he cannot wait to be called, but rushes, in his eager impatience, to the newspapers and the telegraphic wires. This is Mr. Carpenter. He is bursting with anxiety to unburden himself. He is a complete encyclopedia of hearsay on this—to him—titillating theme. He has been by turns interviewer and interviewed thereanent, ever since the precious Woodhull forged her thunderbolt. His fertile mind has addressed itself most persistently to devices for compromise. He has constantly been holding out the idea that the complainant could be bought off. And it is only fair to say that he never seems to have had the smallest perception of the disgraceful character of such a suggestion. One of his projects—of which I have yet seen no mention in print—was that Mr. Beecher's friends should furnish a sufficient sum of money to establish a daily newspaper, of which he (Beecher) was to be the editor, and that Mr. Tilton should be sent abroad, as its foreign correspondent. He intimated very clearly that he had authority for making this proposal. It was, of course, indignantly rejected, with the obvious comment that it was an unmistakable piece of black-mail. When this view of the case was presented to him, it did seem for a moment to dawn upon his mind that it was liable to such a characterization, and he then had the grace to admit that he had not consulted Mr. Beecher about it.

And now Mr. Carpenter comes to the front with a voluminous budget of tittle-tattle. He apparently plumes himself on having been a peripatetic disseminator of the unwholesome gossip incident to this bewildering drama. He goes to New Haven and oscillates continually between New York and Brooklyn, telling everybody what everybody else said. He is just the sort of person to impart an open secret to, and he reveled in the air of privacy with which he narrated to each new comer, in a gush of confidence, the latest thing somebody else had communicated to him in delusive trustfulness.

And this was the way in which the scandal was hushed. In fact it was current everywhere except in the newspapers, and they, to their credit be it said, repressed their curiosity, out of regard to public decency or out of respect to the great name which was being so sacrilegiously assailed. It was because of these perpetual whisperings and shrugs, that Mr. Beecher's life was made unhappy. In his knowledge of the use to which the story was being perverted we have the key to those expressions of anguish, which have been quoted as admissions of guilt. Of a sensitive nature, oppressed with the consciousness of an imprudence, the wrong of which he had greatly exaggerated, and painfully aware of the extent to which he had placed himself in the power of unrelenting persecutors there were moments when he would a thousand times rather have died than live under a dark cloud, which might at any time burst into a pitiless storm of obloquy and vituperation.

But when it is found, as found it will be, that the gloomy romance indulged of the elements which place it within the pale of actual criminality, that there has been nothing in the case beyond a mere ebullition of sentimentality unconsciously tending to, but never resulting in evil—a great load of sorrow will be lifted off the hearts of the people, and a great reputation will be rescued from the blight of licentious speech and mysterious innuendo.

YARMOUTH.

Old Orchard.

People at the Sea Shore—The Methodist Camping Ground—A Romance in the Dining Hall.

If "damnable iteration" can indelibly impress upon the mind of the visitor the fact that Old Orchard beach is just ten miles long, and is the smoothest and hardest in New England, he will never forget it, for the announcement stares at him from the face of numerous posters stuck in every available place and from the back of numberless cards scattered on every hotel and restaurant counter. The beach is a fine one, and the testimony of the cards and posters can be relied upon. Take it when the tide is out and it stretches towards the sea for many rods.

Old Orchard, in common with other summer resorts, is suffering from the backward season. The houses were not fairly opened until the 16th of July, and for the first week the attendance of visitors was very small. But now the tide of travel has set in and most of the hotels are reasonably well filled. At the Old Orchard House there are about three hundred guests, and the long, pleasant piazza, fronting on the sea and within distinct hearing of the sobbing waves, presents an animated appearance toward the close of the day.

People manage to amuse themselves without much exertion. The morning is devoted to bathing. In the afternoon they play croquet or its pretentious adaptation, "chivalrie," and saunter on the beach. Evenings are passed in sitting on the piazza and watching the long red wake which the moon throws on the waves, in dancing to the music of the band, in amateur theatricals on the neat little stage which Mr. Staples has put up at the further end of the great hall, or in surreptitious flirtations in the shades of Fern Park.

The houses close on the beach command a large share of patronage because of their favorable location. Prominent among these is the Orchard Beach House, a cosy, home-like place, situated on the very edge of the sand drives. Its large, pleasant rooms, nice appointments, fine table and reasonable rates, commend it to the attention of visitors. Beyond it at Ferry Beach, is the large, admirably located and finely furnished Bay View House. Altogether away from the noise and bustle of the railway station and the restaurants, commanding an unsurpassed view of the ocean, its many attractions make it a famous resort.

The majority of visitors at the beach this year are Canadians, there being but little summer travel in the states. Several habitues are registered at the Old Orchard House, however. Among them are Hon. Lyman Tremain and family of New York, Judge Ira Eastman of New Hampshire, Prof. Church of West Point, Mr. Charles Sheldon and family of Rutland, Vt., Rev. E. H. Chapin, Rev. J. M. C. Blaney of Albany, N. Y., W. W. Hill of Boston, Geo. T. Stoddard and family of Boston. Among the Canadians are Sheriff Thompson and family of Ontario, S. D. Woodruff and family of St. Catherines, and Henry Thomes and family of Montreal.

The great event of the season, and one looked forward to with much interest, is the national camp meeting which meets August 12th. Very extensive arrangements are being made, and a larger number of people are expected to gather on the grounds during the ten days' session than were ever before assembled in Maine. The grounds have been much beautified and improved since last year, and the spot is now one of the prettiest in the whole country. Twenty-five cottages have been put up this summer, and there are now about fifty buildings on the grounds. These buildings are all supplied with water from the great tank on the brow of the hill. New streets have been laid out and graded and convenient walks made to the station and beach.

The camp ground is now quite a village. It has its grocery and furnishing stores, and Reed's large and excellent boarding-house furnishes facilities for those who do not care to do their own kitchen work. There are now about forty families living on the ground, the majority of them having been there some weeks. Several new cottages are going up and will be ready for occupancy by the 12th.

The great tabernacle, capable of holding 5000 people, has arrived and will be pitched next week. Thursday Rev. Dr. M'Donald, editor of the "Guide to Holiness," and Rev. Mr. Huskipp of Philadelphia, visited the place in behalf of the National Association, to make the final arrangements. Some of the most eminent divines of the denomination are to be present, and large and enthusiastic meetings are anticipated. The speaking platform has been greatly improved and a bell of good size and tone placed in its turret.

Old Orchard is busying itself over a romance. The son of a wealthy Boston merchant has been at the sea shore several weeks, and during that time, it is said, has contrived to fall deeply in love with a very pretty, modest and intelligent waiter girl at one of the beach houses. The affair is said to be settled, and a marriage is on the cards. The matter creates much interest, and the handsome couple attract the attention of all.

ANOTHER OUTRAGE IN TEXAS.—The Daily Statesman of Austin, Texas, in its issue of the 27th ult., called upon Rev. G. W. Honey of the West Texas Conference of the M. E. Church, for the facts in regard to an outrage reported to have been perpetrated upon him on the 14th of the month. In reply Mr. Honey furnished a copy of a letter which he had addressed to Hon. Richard Coke, Governor of Texas. From it we learn that Mr. Honey, who is presiding elder of what is known as the Waco District in the West Texas Conference, the district comprising both white and colored churches, went on Sunday, June 14th, to Belton for the purpose of holding a quarterly conference with the colored church there. The particulars of the outrage are given as follows:

"In the evening I visited and took tea with the family of the pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and accompanied the family at night to their church service, leaving my umbrella at the house by mistake. After service I returned with the family to the parsonage after my umbrella, and, while on my way from thence to the hotel, I was attacked by some ten men, armed and masked, who, against my earnest protestations and resistance, dragged me about one-half mile to the rear of the town, to a deep hole in the creek, where they attempted to take my watch and other valuables, but which they desisted from on my resisting them.

They then took me up bodily and threw me into the creek twice, after which they ran away and left me alone.

The only reason assigned for this act was the remark dropped by one of the mob: 'We'll teach you not to come to Belton to preach to niggers,' and 'if you come again we'll kill you.'"

THE SECRET SERVICE BUREAU.—The report of Solicitor Wilson concerning the operations of the secret service division of the Treasury department covers forty pages of foolscap; and while it does not have any direct reference to the safe robbery, it reviews at length the operations of Col. Whiteley's bureau from the time of its organization. The safe burglary investigation will not be concluded till the Grand Jury has disposed of it. According to Mr. Wilson's report the secret service division was created in 1860. Since its organization the bureau has cost, irrespective of the sums expended by the Commissioners of Customs and the Bureau of Internal Revenue, $1,000,000. The special duty assigned to the corps is the detection and prosecution of persons engaged in counterfeiting Treasury notes, bonds, national bank notes and other securities of the United States. The Solicitor, it is understood, speaks in severe terms of the manner in which the corps has been used for other purposes than its legitimate calling, and favors some system whereby the duties of the officers shall be clearly defined.

CROP PROSPECTS.—The report of the Department of Agriculture for the month of July has just been issued. The following is a brief synopsis of the average condition of the various products:

Oats—The average condition for the whole country is ninety.

Rye—Full average or above in most of the states, and very nearly the average in the remainder.

Potatoes—The average is above two per cent in advance of last year.

Tobacco—The severe drought prevailing in the sections devoted to tobacco culture, together with the destruction of plants by insects, has reduced the average to less than a one-half of that of 1873.

Apples and peaches are both reported below an average.

The first experiment is now making to utilize Chinese labor on the rice plantations of Georgia. Some thirty of the Celestials have been at work since March last on Barnwall's plantation, on the Altamaha, opposite Darien. They give their employer entire satisfaction, and are contented.

DEFAMATION OF NON-BOARD COMPANIES.—During the last few months, on several occasions we have been informed, that it was and is the practice of certain agents of prominent National Board companies in this city and elsewhere, (extending in fact from East to West and from North to South,) to indulge in wholesale sweeping denunciation of the solvency of non-board companies without discrimination or exception. This is a contemptible method of conducting any business, and especially the fire insurance business. It is the vilest way of obtaining patronage, and we pity the company which has for its agent any person so despicably mean, as to run down his rivals in one general strain of defamation.

This journal has been an advocate and supporter of local and National Boards from the day of its first issue, though we have freely criticised blunders and mistakes in their management, and shall continue to do so. We recognize the fact that among the companies outside the National and local boards, are some which are as conservative, as prudent, as reliable, as prompt and as safe in their dealings with the public, as any of those inside of these organizations. We might name several which possess equal experience and talent with any of their loyal neighbors and some also with large and well invested assets which have been as carefully and prudently managed as any of those in the boards. In any test which may be applied, excepting the single one of upholding board rates, they are the peers of the best and cannot be sneered down, lied down or defamed to death. It is an unworthy spirit which animates such defamation.

We would in no manner be understood as claiming these merits for all non-board companies, even as we would not claim all the virtues, stability and soundness par excellence or all board companies. In fact there are some board companies which offer weak points for attack, quite as devoid of superior merit as their non-board rivals. We hold up to public gaze the bad and indifferent, whether of the board or non-board species with equal satisfaction, and shall not spare the rod in punishing both alike if they are guilty of peccadillos in their business transactions. It is not our province to defend any company because it is in the board, any more than to assail another company which is out of the board. We do hold it, however, to be exceedingly impudent and malicious to denounce all non-board companies in the same breath, because it happens that some steal away risks below the tariff rates. Two wrongs never made a right yet, and foul and noisy agents who talk about their neighbors will do to remember it.—Western Insurance Review.

There was almost a riot on Main street, Rockland, Friday. The water company have established a rule which compels the owners of buildings to collect all the water rent from their tenants. The president of the company insisted on Messrs. E. O. & E. H. Ulmer paying the rent for their entire block; they being only tenants, refused, and tendered the company the amount on their rent, which the company would not accept. Accordingly men were set at work digging to shut the water off, and as fast as the dirt was thrown out the Messrs Ulmer shovelled it back, and were finally masters of the situation. A large crowd gathered, and at one time it appeared that a riot was imminent. Had the water party shown resistance a bloody fight would have ensued, as the company is in bad odor with a large majority of the citizens.

Curing versus Cobbling.

There are many medicines that give transient relief in sickness without touching the source and seat of the complaint. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is not one of these. The great tonic and restorative does not cobble the diseased and enfeebled system. It is not a mere palliative, that only temporarily controls a few unpleasant symptoms. No; its invigorating, regulating, restorative principle penetrates to the very source of the difficulty in the fluids and solids of the body, and hence its cures are radical and thorough. In dyspepsia it strengthens the stomach; in liver complaint it regulates the flow of bile; in constipation it promotes a punctual habit of body; in nervous ailments it tones the sentients and motive fibres; in rheumatism it counteracts pain, and in cases of general debility rehabilitates the emaciated frame.

I had "Dyspepsia" twenty years, sometimes able to eat only the plainest food, and very little of that. I tried physicians and remedies without relief until I learned of "White's Specialty for Dyspepsia," which has entirely cured me. (Signed)

Franklin street, opposite the park, is to be raised and graded.

Quinn & Co. have finished one of their iron masts. It is about eighty feet long and is quite a curiosity.

Roberts, the boat-builder, is building two life boats for the Boston steamers. They are made of cedar with air tanks in them, and are said to be both strong and light.

More persons have applied for rooms at the Ottawa House on Cushing's Island, than can be accommodated the coming week.

Joshua Weeks, Esq is better and is able to go about the house. His many friends are hoping to see him out again.

Cloudman, the painter, is finishing a banner for Munjoy Lodge. K. of P. It is a new pattern and very costly. The silk was purchased in New York of A. T. Stewart. None need to send to Boston for a banner as such articles can be as well painted at home.

A new vessel will be launched from Curtis' ship yard, east Commercial street, near the foot of Congress street, to-day at 1½ o'clock.

The Boston & Maine have advanced fares fifteen cents between all stations on their road.

Sheriff Warren of York county, made liquor seizures yesterday at Old Orchard and Ocean houses.

The Light Infantry have accepted an invitation to be present at the reunion of the 1-10-29th regiment at Norway.

Upham & Gardiner have sold S. B. Thrasher's house on Pine street, to Mr. Howes, of the firm of Howes, Hilton & Tarbox. Terms private. Also C. K. Ladd's house, No. 2 Spruce street, to a Mr. Waldron for $4000.

Deputy U. S. Marshal Marble brought two distillers to this city yesterday, who had been operating near Portland without a license.

One case in our court report this morning illustrates the law's delay. It will be remembered that several years since Oliver A. Gould, then editor of the Sunday Advertiser, was indicted for libeling Edward Hight of this city. He was convicted and the case carried to the full bench on exceptions. The decision now announced settles the case in favor of the state.

During the month of July there was not a single alarm of fire.

Maine New Church Association.

The Association was called to order by the Secretary and Missionary, Rev. Geo. F. Stearns, at 10 o'clock. In the absence of the President, the Rev. William B. Hayden was chosen President pro. tem.

Reading from the sacred scriptures and prayer then followed.

On motion, the Secretary and L. G. Jordan, Esq., were appointed a committee on credentials.

The committee reported the following members:

Bath—S. F. Dike, D. D., Ordaining Minister and President.
Delegates—W. D. Sewall, J. B. Swanton, Levi P. Lemont and Daniel Larrabee.
Bangor—No report.
Gardiner—No report.
Portland—Rev. William B. Hayden, pastor.
Delegates—Oliver Gerrish, Benj. Kingsbury, Jr., James P. Baxter, ex-officio, A. M. Burton, Marcian Seavey, Abner Lowell, Arthur M. Small, C. H. Burr, M. D., S E. Sylvester, M. D., Luther F. Pingree, Leonard G. Jordan.
Richmond—Rev. G. F. Stearns, Missionary and Secretary.

The records of last year were given in print. J. B. Swanton, Esq., of Bath, was appointed to audit the accounts of the Treasurer and the Secretary.

The chairman read a communication from William J. Cutler, Esq., of Boston, on the subject of this association's providing the ministers of Maine of all denominations with a lecture by Rev. Chauncey Giles of New York city, upon the claims of the New Church.

The President also made some statements to the effect that copies of Swedenborg's True Christian Religion and his work on Heaven and Hell, would be furnished to the clergy throughout the country upon payment of postage on the same. More than three thousand copies of True Christian Religion have been distributed on these terms. A similar offer has been made in England, and a thousand copies were there supplied in two weeks.

J. B. Swanton, Esq., stated that he had sent circulars containing the offer as above to a thousand clergymen in Maine.

Some discussion took place on the best pamphlet to distribute, by Oliver Gerrish, Esq., who thought Giles' lecture the best he knew of to convey a general idea of the church, and by other gentlemen.

Mr. Swanton thought something else would be better, but was willing this should be sent.

The Missionary, Mr. Stearns, stated that he had called the attention of a great many ministers in this state to the writings of the church and to the terms on which they could be procured, and has known of several getting copies.

Rev. Mr. Hayden has distributed several. In answer to a question, he said that the librarians of the country are making more demands than ever before for New Church books.

Mr. L. G. Jordan remarked that the writings of the church must be disseminated by those already interested in them. The ordinary channels of the book trade do not answer the purpose.

The subject was laid on the table for the present.

Mr. Gerrish, the Treasurer, presented his report. The Auditor's report was also rendered. Both were accepted and ordered on the records.

The financial report of the Missionary, Rev. George F. Stearns, was then presented and some amusing discussion took place upon the items in the report, upon funeral and wedding fees, which was taken part in by Messrs. Jordan, Swanton, Kingsbury, Pingree and Gerrish, and the subject was laid upon the table until Saturday.

A committee on nominations for officers was raised and instructed to report in the afternoon.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The report of the committee on nominations was presented, but pending its acceptance the number of the executive committee was enlarged. The report of the committee was then recommitted for additions.

At four o'clock the Rev. George F. Stearns preached an excellent discourse on the War in Heaven, mentioned in Revelations. He showed that this was an antagonism between truth and falsity, or more specifically between the doctrine of the necessity to live aright as well as to have faith in God, and justification by faith alone.

There was a very pleasant social party held in the evening at the house of Mrs. James E. Fernald.

To-day the association will meet at 10 a. m. and 2½ p. m. Sermon at 4 p. m. There will also be religious services and addresses by several gentlemen in the evening at 7½ o'clock.

On the Sabbath the Rev. Dr. Hibbard of Chicago, will officiate at 10½ a. m. The Holy Supper will be partaken of at 4 p. m., and probably the Rev. Frank Sewall, President of Urbana University, Ohio, will conduct the evening services.

Mrs. Hibbard, wife of Rev. Dr. Hibbard, will address the children at the Sabbath School immediately after the morning service.

Mrs. Hibbard is a refined and highly accomplished lady, who has traveled extensively in the Holy land and Egypt. She has had large experience in teaching, and what is unusual, is the Superintendent of a New Church Sabbath School of considerable size in Chicago. She will illustrate the Kindergarten or object method of teaching to Sabbath Schools at the school of the Portland Society immediately after the morning services.

A MONTH'S WORK.—During the month of July the police force in this city have made a good showing. There were 260 arrests for drunkenness; 25 for larceny; 25 for affrays; 7 for breaking and entering; 5 for robbery; a total of 322. During the time the department has recovered and returned to the owners $1000 of property. Although there has been a good deal of talk about burglars, only four cases of breaking where the thieves have obtained any plunder have been reported to the City Marshal.

BREAKING AND ENTERING.—About two weeks ago Walker's fruit store on Congress Street, was entered by opening the back door, and a pair of new boots taken. Nothing more was thought of the affair until also it a week since, when the store was broken into again and another pair of boots that had been purchased to supply the place of the others, stolen. Thursday night the store was broken into again as before, and four boxes of lozenges taken. Mr. Walker thinks it is getting to be monotonous.

Personal.

Major A. M. Benson, Quartermaster of the First Division, Maine Volunteer Militia, is in Bangor, selecting suitable grounds on which to hold the state muster.

Rev. J. E. Norris, missionary of the American Baptist Missionary Union, will return to Burmah the ensuing autumn.

Hon. Wm. P. Frye of Lewiston has engaged rooms at the Pine Grove House, Waterford, for himself and family.

Prof. Barbour of Bangor will preach at the Walnut avenue Congregational church, Boston, on four of the five Sabbaths in August.

The Maine Consistory of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, 100 strong, will escort Hon. Josiah H. Drummond to Boston, at the meeting of the Supreme Council on the 16th of August. Mr. Drummond being the Sovereign Grand Commander of that body, the consistory will be attired in the prescribed regalia, which is very elegant.

Dr. Franklin B. Hough of Lowville, N. Y., has accepted an invitation to deliver an address upon the occasion of the anniversary of the landing at Popham, August 29th, (new style) 1607. Dr. Hough procured, some years since, from the archives at Albany, the papers relating to Pemaquid, which were published in a separate volume at the time, and they also form a part of one of the volumes of the collection of the Maine Historical Society.

Prof. M. C. Fernald of the State College, with a party of the students and other gentlemen, propose to visit Mt. Katahdin again this season to continue the barometrical observations for a careful determination of its altitude. Mr. E. L. Scribner will again have charge of the botanical observations, and other scientific work is also planned.

Isaac Dyer, Esq, a well known citizen, died at his residence, 407 Congress street, yesterday evening.

LARCENIES.—Thursday night Mr. and Mrs. Conroy, a newly married couple, stayed at Mr. Donovan's in Freeman Court. In the morning while Mr. and Mrs. Donovan were out of the room, Mrs. Conroy stole a silver watch and chain valued at $40, and left. Mrs. Donovan returned, and missing the watch, left word at the station. Officers Burnham and Merrill arrested Conroy and his wife and found the watch in their possession. They say that they took the watch for fun and intended to return it.

Officer Crowell and private watchman McClusky arrested six young boys yesterday morning while they were sleeping in the shed in the rear of Woodman & True's store. They are all from Boston and confess making several breaks in the city of late. They say that their ringleader is in Boston. They recently broke into the store of Mr. Dyer at the Cape. Probably this gang and the four who were arrested by Deputy Bridges and officer Gribben, are responsible for the majority of breaks that have been made in this city recently.

Yesterday morning a young, slatwart looking man entered the eating house on Custom House wharf and asked for a lunch. While the proprietor was getting it for him he stole the contents of the money drawer, about $10, and started to leave the shop when the proprietor caught him and attempted to recover the money, but he managed to get away, money and all. Officers Moseley and Place arrested a young man last evening who was identified as the thief.

STREET PAVING.—Considerable interest has been taken by our citizens of late in regard to street paving. The fine condition of Free street, which has been macadamized, and of the parts of streets that have been paved with wood, cobble-stones, and granite blocks, has brought out an inquiry in regard to the relative costs of each. The work on Free street cost about $2.75 per square yard, while cobble-stones cost but $1.75. Granite blocks cost $2.85, and wooden blocks $2.10. By the cost is meant the excavation, sand, labor, &c. In Boston it costs $4.00 per yard to macadamize a street, and in like proportion for paving.

The wooden pavement that has been laid is giving good satisfaction, and it will probably become the pavement in a few years on all the streets except those where there is a good deal of heavy teaming, where granite blocks or cobble-stones are no doubt better.

A MODEL ESTABLISHMENT.—The new pork factory of Thompson & Fuller, which was opened this week, is a model establishment of its kind. The buildings are well adapted to the purposes for which they are used, and the new and improved machinery is really a curiosity. Five hundred and fifty hogs can be disposed of and converted into excellent pork in a day. The work, except the throat-cutting, is all done by machinery, and the hog, from the time he enters the slaughter house to the time he enters the packing barrel, has an excellent chance to test the results of yankee ingenuity. A detailed account of the operation would scarcely be very entertaining. The market is chiefly in the Southern and Western states. The neatness of the establishment is very noticeable.

ACCIDENT.—Yesterday afternoon Thomas Mulkern was seriously injured while at work in the hold of the British bark Wahsatch, by the falling of a large lump of coal some thirty feet from a tub, striking him on the head and shoulders. Those who witnessed the accident could not fail to speak with the highest terms regarding the kindness and sympathy shown by Captain Graham to the injured man.

WHARF IMPROVEMENT.—Franklin Wharf Company are repairing the east side of this wharf, near Commercial street. The dock between Franklin and Burnham's wharf is to be filled up solid, making a valuable building site where now nothing stands but a worthless old shop. Mr. Libby has the contract for the filling.

PREPARATORY LECTURE.—A preparatory lecture will be delivered by Rev. R. B. Thurston, of Stamford, Conn., at a quarter before eight o'clock this evening in the vestry of High street church He will also occupy the desk on Sunday.

PATENTS.—No patents were issued to Maine inventors during the week ending July 14th. Messrs. Smith & Bird report the following trade mark: No. 1,878, chewing gum, Curtis & Son, Portland, "White Mountain Chewing Gum."

POSTPONED.—On account of the windy weather last night, Messrs. Shaw and Ellis' entertainment was postponed until this evening, when it will take place if the weather is favorable.

MATTERS IN MAINE

Accident.

BATH, July 31. About half-past five this afternoon the shifting engine on the Maine Central Railroad was running round the curve near Center street in this city. It encountered a hand car upon which were seven men coming in at full speed. All jumped from the car but one, Martin McDonough, who was at the time turning the crank. He was badly bruised about the head, shoulders and back, and there is doubt of his recovery.

NEW YORK.

Cadet Smith's Explanation of His Dismissal.

NEW YORK, July 31.—J. N. Smith, the colored Cadet a West Point, who was dismissed for deficiency in philosophy, details the history of his examination, showing that the report made against him was not for deficiency, but in accordance with the suggestion from high authority not to allow him to graduate, and thereby save the War Department the onerous task of finding a suitable assignment in the army, where he would be welcomed by the white officers as an officer and gentleman.

A Parallel to the Pomeroy Case.

A girl of 15 years named Henrietta Wabel, is under arrest, having confessed to setting fire to a room in a hotel at West Farms, because she saw the infant child of the proprietor asleep on a bed, and, as she states, wanted to see it burn up. The fire, however, was extinguished, but not until the little one was somewhat burned. She appears to have the same devilish mania that affects the Pomeroy boy of Boston.

European News Agencies.

The European news agencies—the Reuter Telegram Company of London, and Havas, Laffte & Co., of Paris, have been amalgamated under arrangements made between them for a long term of years, and the agency of the former company in this city will, hereafter, be known as the United States of Reuter, Havas, London and Paris. The business of the Reuter Company, which has hitherto embraced for European, Asiatic, African and Australian consumption, the news and commercial affairs of the United States, the West Indies and Canada, has since the completion of the South American cable, been extended to Brazil, the Argentine Republic, Chili and such other of the nations of South America as are in telegraphic communication with the rest of the world. The consolidated companies announce that they will hereafter deliver all commercial messages entrusted to their charge to all parts of the world.

Important Decision Affecting the Coastwise Trade.

The Secretary of the Treasury has decided that the lines of steamers plying between the British provinces and places in the United States on the Atlantic coast must conduct their business in all respects as other foreign going vessels are required to do. This decision will affect several Eastern lines which have heretofore carried on business in an irregular manner, and thus enjoyed privileges not countenanced by law.

The Mississippi Trouble—Gov. Ames calls for Aid—Refusal.

WASHINGTON, July 31.—The following is a telegram of Gov. Ames of Mississippi to the President in relation to the Vicksburg trouble:

JACKSON, Miss., July 29.

To the President of the United States:—"I regret to inform you that I find upon returning here that an alarming condition of affairs exists at Vicksburg. Infantry and cavalry organizations exist, and it is reported that a number of pieces of artillery have been sent to that city, and these bodies organized and armed without authority and in violation of the law, assume to be guardians of the peace. This is a political controversy. On one side by the Democrats represented by the whites, claim that they fear frauds on the parts of their opponents. The Republicans consisting mainly of blacks, claim they fear frauds and also violence on the parts of the Democrats. At one time a collision and bloodshed was feared by all, not by the Republicans, but by the Democrats. It is disbelieved only because they have become masters of the situation. It is they also who oppose the presence of troops at this time. Of the causes of this lamentable state of affairs, it is now useless to speak. I only seek peace and protection for all. Can there be any serious objection why troops should not be sent there? No harm can result, for troops are in many of our cities at this moment, in two of the cities of this State their presence may do great good. It may save many lives. Even one would more than compensate for the harm, if any, I do not see to result from such presence. Will it not be the least of evils to have troops there for any emergency.

Signed, ADELBERT AMES,
Governor of Mississippi.

The following reply was sent to Gov. Ames to-day:

WASHINGTON, July 31.

To Hon. A. Ames, Jackson, Miss:—The contents of your despatch have been submitted to the President. He declines to move the troops except under a call made strictly in accordance with the terms of the constitution.

Signed, W. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

A White Man's Party.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., July 31.—The Democratic State Convention adjourned at 2 o'clock this morning. B. D. Lewis and W. H. Forney are candidates for Congress at large.

The resolutions announce that the action of the Republican party necessitates the union of the white people in self defence; acknowledges the rights of all classes under the constitution and laws, but reject social union on an equality; denounce the so called civil rights bill as a flagrant and dangerous invasion of the conservative principle of free government and a palpable violation of the constitution, and view with abhorrence the attempt to take possession of schools, colleges, churches, hotels, railroads, theatres, &c., for the purpose of establishing negro equality; invite white immigration; urge the enactment of the laws to secure wages to the employed of railroad corporations, and pledge economy in the state government, and the payment of every dollar justly owed by the state when it is able to do so.

Horrible Outrage and Swift Retribution.

SHREVEPORT, La., July 31.—The report of a horrible outrage and swift retribution reached this city to-night. The facts, as far as ascertained, are as follows; A widow, named Silas, resides with her 14 year old daughter in Desoto Parish, near the Caddo line. At 6 o'clock last evening a negro, named Marsh, entered the house during the absence of the mother, overpowered the daughter, carried her to the woods and outraged her. After returning to consciousness the girl gave the alarm and a mounted party started in pursuit of the negro, patrolling the woods in the neighborhood. Marsh was captured at six o'clock this morning near the scene of the outrage, and was hung on the Caddo side of Cypress bayou.

THE GREAT SCANDAL.

Moulton Wanted, But Not to be Found.

Mr. Beecher's Statement Completed.

Efforts to Discover Moulton's Whereabouts.

NEW YORK, July 31.—It is said that every effort is being made on the part of the Investigating Committee to obtain the testimony of Frank Moulton. A special messenger has been despatched by the Committee to serve a summons upon him. No information could be obtained at his residence as to his whereabouts. He has been reported at one time in Narragansett pier, but that is ascertained to be incorrect. It was afterward said that he was at Wakefield, a small village in the southerly part of Rhode Island, and later still that he was at or near Boston, but up to the present time he has not been found. An autograph letter has been addressed by Beecher to Moulton requesting him to testify and to produce before the committee all papers and letters in his possession. The absence of Moulton excites universal comment.

Remarkable Statement of His Counsel.

Tilton firmly believes that Beecher's friends are the instigators of Gaynor's libel suit, Gaynor being nothing but a tool in their hands.

Sam. Morris, formerly District Attorney of Brooklyn, who is now Tilton's lawyer, a year ago advised the keeping of all the matter entirely private. Morris has implicit faith in the truth of Tilton's cause, and yesterday stated that he had known for a year past certain facts which must now come out. He states that he has labored hard to suppress them, for the sake of public decency; but he felt now that the facts, horrible as they are, would have to be established.

Probable Dismissal of the Libel Case.

Mr. Morris and District Attorney Winslow held a long conference yesterday, and it is now believed that the libel case against Tilton will be dismissed by Judge Riley next Monday. The Grand Jury will not hold a session until September, and upon what transpires in the interview will depend whether District Attorney Winslow will lay the Beecher-Tilton case before that body.

Beecher's Statement Completed.

Beecher's statement is completed, but Tracy, his lawyer, will not allow it to be given to the committee until Moulton has made his statement.

Beecher goes to Peekskill to-day.

Various Reports and Rumor.

The Committee say that if Moulton does not testify soon they will take Beecher's statement, and render a verdict as best they can with such facts as they have. Last evening was set apart for Dr. Storrs's examination, but he remained in Massachusetts, where he is rusticating.

The Tribune says that a messenger was sent by Mrs. Tilton to her late residence with a list of articles of clothing which she needed and was met at the door by Mr. Tilton, who said: "Mrs. Tilton can take away her clothing if she wants to, but not another thing shall be taken from the house."

Frank B. Carpenter will be requested to-day to go before the Beecher committee.

Moulton, Woodhull and Carpenter.

Mr. Sherman, Clerk of Plymouth church, is represented as saying to day to a reporter of the Brooklyn Eagle: "I have talked with Mr. Moulton, and he has nothing to say that will hurt Mr. Beecher. It is for the interest of Frank Moulton that Frank Moulton does not speak. Mr. Moulton has held very peculiar relations with Mr. Tilton. I know what Mr. Moulton's testimony is, and I wish he would speak."

There is a rumor that Victoria Woodhull and Tennie C. Claflin will present themselves before the investigating committee to night and demand to be heard. The women sail for Europe to-morrow, and claim the right to make their statement before the committee close the investigation.

It is understood that Dr. Storrs has replied to the summons sent him that he will appear if possible. It is stated that Frank Carpenter will testify next Monday.

The Beecher investigation committee interrogated a lady to-night believed to be Mrs. Tilton. Woodhull and Claflin made an effort to offer their testimony but it was declined. The committee meet again Monday evening.

Miss Anthony Reticent.

UTICA, N. Y., July 31.—The Utica Morning Herald will to-morrow print the report of an interview held to-day with Susan B. Anthony at Madella, Cayuga county, regarding the Beecher-Tilton matter. Miss Anthony declined to affirm or deny the statements attributed to her by Mrs. Stanton and her brother, Dr. Anthony. She said: "If I did say it, it was very ungracious of them to repeat it. If I did not, it is worse of them to make it up." Being asked if she would go before the Plymouth church committee if summoned, she replied: "No; what I have to say will be said only before a tribunal competent to deal with the matter, and able to compel unwilling utterance."

THE INDIANS.

Gen. Sherman's Views.

NEW YORK, July 31.—A Washington special says that Gen. Sherman does not consider the Indian troubles as very serious and thinks they will soon die out, but

POETRY.

Trout-Fishing.

BY WILL WALLACE HARNEY.

'Tis twenty years. Do you remember
When, boy and girl, we stole the skiff,
And went a-fishing one September?
The lake so clear, it was as if,
Upborne on love's delicious leaven,
We floated in a pure mid-heaven,
With clouds of lilies for a border.
The fragrant summer seemed to ache
In blossom for dear passion's sake,
Excessive with its sweet disorder.
In you, too, was that fond distress
Of flush and fear and happiness,
Caresses by caress unbinded.
Till, fingers mated on the reel,
I thought the very trout could feel
His double spoil was caught and landed.

Alas! that love which we remember,
Blush-ripe as all those wanton weeds,
Should be a blossom of September.
Born guiltless of the promise seeds—
Sweet dying things, whose only duty
Is clothing life in forms of beauty!
For though I held you in my arms,
As full of honey in your charms
As when the trefoil holds the clover,
Your fingers, tutored in a thimble,
In playing trout were found so nimble
You hooked the fish and cast the lover.

But often, since we slipped the books
To play for life with baited hooks
In pools less pure, do I remember
The fragile blossom of September,
Born guiltless of the promise seeds—
A dying thing, whose only duty
Was clothing life in forms of beauty,
With heaven above and heaven below it.
Though life has grown to other needs,
Our boat lies rotting in the weeds,
And we can neither raise nor row it.

Tottie Wylde's Device.

CHAPTER I.

"I wish you wouldn't talk such rubbish, Eddie!" said pretty Tottie Wylde, maliciously, as she lay, one brilliant summer day, busily digging holes with her parasol in the soft sward of the down overlooking sea-surf, on the southern coast. Her younger brothers had wandered away to roll boulders down into the level below, and her cousin, Edwin Keiller, pined for her to say she loved and would marry him.

"It isn't rubbish, Tot," he replied warmly; "You know you like me, and yet you drive me mad with your childish ways. Can't you—"

"No! I can't, sir, and I won't—I won't tie myself to any man. I am going to be an old maid, and travel about the country lecturing on women's rights, with that dear Miss Faithful."

He chewed the end of his cigar with vexation as she chaffed him: "I'll not ask you again, Tot; you must deliberately mean to make me miserable, or you wouldn't go on like that."

"Oh yes, you will—you know you will—won't you, Eddie?" She laughed all over as, certain of her prey, she teased and petted him, and put a tiny hand in his, while making a little moue.

"I won't, I tell you. I'm not going to be made a tool of all my life, by Jove! I'll go back to town to-morrow, and grind away at law."

"Oh, Eddie, Eddie! and leave your own Tottie lamenting?" Again she laughed outright, and locked bewitchingly, while the sweet south wind tossed her brown locks wildly. He got up in a rage, flung his cigar away, and turned as if to go down home. Tottie relented, but she could not help irritating him a little more: "Eddie, Eddie!" she called, "don't leave me; now come back here, there's a good boy! and I'll tell you what I'll do—I really will," she pleaded, as a brilliant idea flashed across her brain, and he could not help turning round to listen to the winning tones: "I'll marry you, Eddie—there—if—if—but will you promise me you'll agree to what I say?"

She acted capitally, did little Tottie Wylde, and she attracted his attention at once. He answered—

"I'll agree to anything, if you are in earnest."

"I am in earnest. You promise?"

"I promise."

"Very well. Now I'll tell you," she said, jumping up from the grass as her eyes sparkled with fun. "But where are the boys? Oh, there they are, coming back. Well, Eddie (now mind, it's a bargain), you are not to ask me any more if I win what I am going to tell you; and I'll promise to marry you whenever you like if you win—is it a bargain?"

"Yes, I promise," he said, entering into the fun of the thing, and thinking that it must end to his advantage, whatever it was.

"Well, so do I on my side. Now, what I mean is, that we shall run a foot race for it down the hill, right to the bottom."

"What bosh, Tottie! Why you'd fall on your head before you got ten yards, and then there'd be a nice row at the Royal!" He laughed at the absurdity of the idea,

"Would I, indeed, Mr. Impertinence—we'll see. You've promised, and I mean to keep you to it."

"You are really in earnest?"

"Of course I am!" she answered, beating a wee foot determinedly on the ground.

"All right," he laughed out gleefully, "You're mine then!"

"Don't be so sure," she smiled a little slyly. She knew what she could do on her own rugged Welsh mountains; she knew also pretty well what used to be her cousin's capabilities in the same locality, and experienced little fear for the result. The boys rolled on the turf in ecstasies of fun when they learned the terms of the bargain.

"By Jove, she'll beat you, Eddie!" said Jack, who rather looked down on his cousin as an athelete.

"That she won't—I bet you half a crown she won't."

Edwin Keiller did not quite like it; the descent was very steep, broken in places with hollows that could not well be seen until one was just in them, and it was an immence distance to the level at the bottom, which rose again before culminating in the final cliff that overhung Seasurf. He had no fear whatever for himself, but he had on Tottie's account; she would not, however, be gainsaid, but kept him to the race and began to get ready.

"Now, Harry, you shall start us fairly; Jack hold this for me, and this;" handing him her fairy hat and delicate mantle. Then she tied her hair in a firm knot behind, shortened her petticoats with one tight hand, and kept the other free to balance herself.

"Oh, nonsense, Tottie! let us give it up—it's so silly," said Keiller.

"You're afraid!" she laughed out, flushed with excitement.

"I'm not!" he retorted, indignantly, placing himself in position.

"Are you ready?" asked Harry, in high glee, while Jack absolutely howled with delight.

"Ready!"

"One, two, three—off!" he shouted, and away they bounded, the boys keeping a little behind.

"Run Tottie! run! run! they screamed; and Tottie, brisk-footed maiden of seventeen as she was, hill-born and limb free as a fawn, did run her best; flying with shortened clothes down the ragged steep; bounding over the furze bushes and intervening rocks; never shirking, never swaying, save once, when an ugly hollow yawned before her, from which she saved herself almost by a miracle; till she reached the bright green flat at the bottom, and turned triumphantly to see where the beaten Edwin was in the race. She could not see him; she could not see her brothers even; was it possible that they had all fallen in the treacherous hollow she had so narrowly escaped? So back up the steep hill she ran again in strange dismay till she gained the brink of the pit, wherein lay Edwin on his back, his face snow-white and laced with blood from a horrid ragged cut on the forehead; and by his side her two brothers, kneeling, as useless as boys always are in the presence of pain, sickness or trouble. In a second she had gained the bottom of the hollow: "Oh, Eddie, Eddie!" she cried, kneeling on the grass in a passion of tears, with the long, brown hair now tumbled in confusion all over her sweet face. "What have I done? oh, what has happened?

He did not speak, but the useless boys said in their ignorance; "Oh, nonsense, Tottie! he's not hurt—only shaken a bit!"

She, girl-like, turned on them furiously: "He's killed for all you know or care! Water, get some water—down there at the bottom, where I ran!" Jack bounded away, delighted to escape the fierce look, and soon returned with a hatful, to find Tottie supporting Edwin's head against her breast, while she wiped away, with her dainty pocket-handkerchief, the clotted blood from the wound in the forehead. Then she sprinkled his face with sharp dashes of the water, until at length he came to and faintly smiled. "You've beaten me, Tot," he feebly uttered, as he opened his eyes and saw whose arms were supporting him. She smiled through her fast-coming tears. "Oh, Eddie, darling, I'm so sorry."

"Never mind it, Tot," he said, "I'm all right now!" and in proof of the fact he turned to get up. A sharp yell of pain dispelled the idea. The man's left arm was broken, and poor Tottie's heart was very sad as she and Henry helped him down to the Royal Hotel on Seasurf, where they are all staying—Jack having flown on ahead to have a surgeon in readiness.

The Hon. Mark and Mrs. Wylde, with Tottie and the two boys, made up in all a strangely clever family. Proud and humble in a breath; despising wealth while they reveled in it; disliking poverty, and famous for the number of poor friends they cultivated; scorning society and yet enjoying it with a keen zest; utterly uncontrollable by caste or its traditions, and at the same time proud of their high birth; they stalked, noble savages in the hunting-grounds of fashion. The grand Welsh mountains, from whose story gorges they had emerged but a year or two back, had (their friends said) no little to do with this contempt for common Saxon custom; and had not Edwin Keiller been a constant visitor to the old estate in the troubled hills, as well as a bona fide cousin, he would never have come to be called "Eddie, darling!" by the only daughter, or hold the place he did in the family as a sort of tamed attache, whom Tottie was not unlikely to take into her head to marry some fine day.

"Only I'm sure I don't know where you are to get bread and cheese from, Tottie, if you do," said Mrs. Wylde, one day (on her way to Seasurf), sitting half-stifled in a gorgeous drawing-room of a Brooklyn street hotel. "We can color photographs, ma, dear!" answered Tottie, laughing merrily at the folly. Not that she meant to marry Edwin or any one else; she was very fond of him—as she was of her brother Jack or Harry—but she had no intention of being worried with a husband at all—that she hadn't, and told him very plainly, when for the thousandth time he tried to get her into a sentimental mood.

The Wyldes (with Edwin for their guest), when they arrived at Seasurf, took half the ground floor at the "Royal," with wide French windows opening on mossy grass, gay flowers, with shrubs and greens of all shades; and below, the heavenly violet sea, reaching away unbroken into an eternity of mists that sent, at times, deep growling echoes of warning back to murmur ceaselessly on the wave-worn beach. A glorious place for love-making, a glorious time and a glorious prize. Hills, and sea, and flowers; and warmth with scented breezes; and calm and seclusion—opportunities everywhere and in every respect; but in spite of all, Edwin Keiller made no progress. Tottie only laughed at him, and he sickened with despair sometimes; sometimes contemplated with horror his crushing poverty, as he almost dreaded lest he should drag that bright bird down to a level she was unsuited for. He was but a poor barrister, and taking shorthand notes in special cases for the law journals brought him in more than any other branch of his profession. Not seldom he raved against himself as culpable, against Tottie for encouraging him, and against her parents for throwing them so much together—such is the folly of man.

So Edwin Keiller had lost the race, broken his arm, got a cut on the head that would mark him for life, and dissipated all his chances of marrying Tottie Wylde, as the results of one morning's nonsense. For lying on a couch out in the veranda of the "Royal" one day, when the heavy heat seemed to press on the air in masses, he resolved that, come what might, he would adhere to his silly promise, and never again mention the subject of marriage to his cousin. Poor little Tottie was inconsolable for the mischief she had innocently caused; she tended and watched over Edwin with the closest care; she gathered flowers for him; she read to him—novels, magazines, dull newspapers, even musty law reports; she sang to him; she played chess with him; nay, she even kissed him; but not one word could she extract from the white, pain compressed lips to prove that he had forgiven her silly freak by speaking of the old subject between them. He kept his promise sternly; she would not speak of it, no, not for the whole world—still so proud was that coy maiden; and gradually there came between them coolness—a sort of stand-off ishness—that retarded the man's physical recovery, while it rendered the young girl miserable with the bitter misery of self-baffled affection.

CHAPTER II.

"By Jove! old Sam Hall, as I live!" Edwin half rose from the great easy-chair in the verandah—he was convalescent now—as a tall, brown-faced dragoon swung across the bottom of the flower-dotted lawn on the way up from the beach.

"Sam! hallo, Sam!" he called; the dragoon paused to look up. With him there walked a fine, stately girl, also a dragoon, as you could see by her unmistakable barrack walk, and that noli me tangere air that generally appertains to the female soldier. The brother and sister came slowly across the grass toward the verandah.

"Can't think who the deuce the fellow is—do you know him, Car?"

"No, unless he's young Bartlett, of the 'Crashers'—at Fyzabad, you know, Sam."

"Not he—dead long ago—'yellow jack' at Bermuda. Why, it's old Eddie Keiller!"

Hand-shaking, "dear old boying," etc., etc., ad libitum. Then introductions; for these two men had been public-school chums together, therefore of the same caste, and therefore at liberty to bring their womankind together. Tottie and Carrie Hall set about "reckoning up" one another with that marvelous instantaneous grasp of character instinctive with the keener sex. The sum total in either case was a compromise.

It was not to be a sudden, gushing, deathless friendship; nor yet a sharp, mutual dislike, scarce veiled decently over with Judas-kisses and plenteous "my dear" and "my darlings." They felt at once that their present position must be a dignified one of non-intervention, an armed neutrality capable of transformation should policy so demand. The Halls had just come home from India, and down to the "Royal" at Seasurf to recruit.

"Like it? oh, it is so jolly!" answered Carry, as she lay out under the tree shade with Eddie a fortnight or so after her arrival—her brother and the Wildes having gone off on a rough-and-tumble picnic some twenty miles away. Carry Hall would not join them; unwell, she said; and Edwin couldn't—on account of his arm.

"Jolly as Montone, and without the gambling," he added to her description.

"Without the gambling! Don't you ever play, Mr. Keiller?"

"Hate it. Besides, I have no money; so I couldn't if I would."

Just a trifling shade passed over her face, he thought, as he explained his absence of wealth. Then she laughed uneasily.

"Some people play without much money of their own—Sam does for one—and as for me, I am a regular gambler—a professional one. I gamble with everything. Even with—"

"You affec—" Eddie was insisting, but she pretended not to hear the interuption, and went on,

"My neck, Sam says, when out pig-sticking."

"And have you actually—stuck pigs?" he asked, maliciously, half rolling over on his sound arm to have a better look of her face.

"Dont be absurd, Mr. Keiller. I have been out and ridden hard to see men do it, though—there, don't say it's unladylike, for it isn't; besides, your Tot—Miss Wylde, I mean—would do the same if she had the chance."

"How do you know?" he asked curiously, wreathing his cigar-smoke in circles from his nostrils.

"Oh I know she would," was the incouequent answer. Carry Hall was rapidly plucking daisy-heads and aiming them at the very elegant bottine that peeped out at the foot of her dress. "I know she would; she is just what Sam calls little devil (don't you be shocked, I'm a soldier, you know) at anything!"

Eddie Keiller was not shocked at all; in fact he rather liked a straightforward bit of slang in a regular girl of the world—more particularly when she happened to be a remarkably handsome one, with brains and reserve power of being lady-like to extreme when she choose.

"Poor, poor dear little devil!" he murmured softly and half to himself.

Carry Hall blushed up a bright passion color.

"You know I didn't mean anything of the sort," she deprecated; "besides, if I did, it's not likely I should have said it, knowing how fond Mr. Keiller is of her—though she did break his arm."

"But she didn't. Miss Hall!" retorted the other warmly, for he had not entirely forgotten the old love, though, indeed, he choose to regard it now as a mere brotherly and sisterly affection.

"But she did, Mr. Keiller—young Jack Wylde told me all about the race—it's well she did not break your neck, as well as—your heart!" She whispered the last two words, and looked half up at him over her shoulder, to see how he would take them. The girl had marked down this handsome Eddie Keiller for her own, and determined to spare no effort to bring him to bay, poor as he was.

"I'm very fond of Tottie," he said gravely, yet with a half sigh, as he shifted restlessly on the soft grass; "very fond of her—she's my cousin, you know."

"So am I fond of her; she is a dear little thing; but I don't believe in cousins!"

"Let us crawl down to the beach and hear the band play," he said, pretending to yawn as he turned away to rise.

It was a good move to conceal a little inevitable confusion that came over him just at that moment. Miss Hall quite appreciated it So they went down by the "much-resounding sea;" dawdled about the band-stand; strolled; laid down on the shingle; strolled again, and were finally lost to view round a promontory leading to ferny dells and shady heather-scented nooks, where omnipresent Mother Gossip was in the habit of saying most of the flirting of Seasurf was carried on.

"Decided case for St. George's 'Anover Square!" remarked a vulgar cockney snob (so Eddie Keiller called him) to his comrade as they passed the pair.

"Aug it all—ain't she a clipper?" was the undisguised note of admiration of No. 2 for Carry Hall's attractions; and the cads continued their walk.

From that day she seemed to grow on Edwin Keiller, as it were, and to become more and more a necessity of his life. There was a fascination about the girl; about her really fine beauty; about the play of her warm, dark eyes, and the waving of her voluptuous hair; about the deep, rich voice, and about her knowledge even of men and things, amply illustrated as it was with a fund of personal anecdote. She was brilliant and spiritually as the Frenchwoman, stately as the Spaniard, luxurious in repose as the Italian, handsome as the Greek, and "jolly" as the frank, open, English girl. Edwin Keiller felt under the influence; he was charmed! he loved a living poem, a fine picture, a stately statue, and he very much admired Carry Hall.

Poor Tottie Wylde was in tribulation. Since the accident her sisterly affection for Eddie seemed somehow to change its nature. At times she reproached herself bitterly with not feeling toward him in those days of pain as she had felt before; she could not regard him as Harry or Jack now; there seemed a difference—a something between them that was as strange as it was unpleasant. Could it be that his silence on the marriage question (upon which he had been so worrying before) was really annoying her? Absurd; she flung the thought from her. But then this showy Carry Hall, with her airs and graces, and knowledge of the world, and fascinating clever talk—was not Eddie (Tottie's own Eddie) struck with her? Was he not almost openly flirting with her? Horrible thought! Might he not be actually in love with her? It looked very like it, and though she (Tottie) did not, would not, could not care one atom for him in that way, still it was a pity to see him entrapped by this brazen she-dragon; and poor Tottie burst into bitter tears as, after numberless sleepless nights and endless mental discussion of all the ins and outs of the matter, she at length came to the inevitable conclusion that it must be so, and that she herself was really in love with this man, who shocked, doubtless, and disgusted with her girlishness, her levity, and her share in his accident, had given up all thoughts of her all love for her, in favor of the odious Carry Hall. This conclusion came to the young girl with a cruel pang, none the less severe that she felt that she had almost forced events to take the course they had done, and her self afflicted punishment was constant and sharp. But she had plenty of pluck, had this mountain maiden, together with a soupcon of natural feminine revenge in her mental constitution, and she soon made up her mind that, if Eddie had really thrown her over (for, of course, the race to decide the question was all nonsence), he should not, in addition, have the satisfaction of seeing that she cared for the act, or missed him in the least. If he openly flirted, so could she; if he was playing false, why should she appear to mind?

Captain Sam Hall—(why, by the way, are the swarms of Halls that adorn the British service, each and every one, dubbed "Sam," as if there were no other nickname possible?)—Captain Hall was a terrible flirt, of the most dangerous sort—not your namby-pamby "ladies man," who is tolerated by the sex much as wise kings in the days of yore tolerated their court-fools—but a real slap-dash, go ahead admirer, who could not help making love to every pretty woman he saw, whether she liked it or not, and was in consequence very successful in his love-forays. In Captain Sam's eyes Tottie Wylde was simply adorable, and from the first day he saw her established at the "Ryal" by Eddie's sofa he determined on a flirtation. He tried it, and got well laughed at by her for his pains; but he, nothing daunted, resumed operations day by day, until at last—somewhat suddenly, and a good deal to his surprise—his new charmer appeared to appreciate his efforts, and, he made rapid progress in his suit. In fact Tottie Wylde, when once she began to favor him, became almost too exigeante, and (whether it was his face, his heroism, his jovial manner, or a combination of all, he could not tell) she sat with him, walked with him, danced with him, and acted towards him altogether more like an engaged bride than anything else, once the ice between them had been broken. For some reason or other, Sam Hall was very anxious to keep things of this sort a little dark before his sister; he seemed (absurd as it was) to be afraid of her laughing at him for spooning on such a chit as Miss Wylde; while Tottie was just as desirous to preserve appearances before her brothers (her parents didn't care much what she did)—boys will be so annoyed about these affairs—so that eventually it came to pass that an understanding was established between the two as to their walks, rides, moonlight strolls, etc., that was very pleasant, even if a little deceitful. But somehow Sam discovered, to his great chagrin at first (afterward he did not mind it a bit), that they seldom or never deceived Eddie, who not unfrequently turned up unexpectedly in the most enjoyable tete-a-tete, to their manifest confusion and his very evident annoyance.

"Gad, Miss Car must have a hand in this!" Sam said one day to Tottie as they met Eddie face to face in a secluded part of the promontory walk.

"Why your sister?" asked Tottie, when he had passed on; "surely you don't leave my notes lying about?"

Captain Hall muttered apologetically something about his d—d carelessness, which he excused on the ground that Carry took care of everything for him. Tottie would put a stop to that easily, so (rejoicing to know that Eddie could see them from the position on the hill) she made Master Sam sit down, and there and then she inducted him into the mysteries of a system of shorthand her brother Jack had somehow picked up. "There," she said, handing him a copy of the character to put in his card case, "I'll always write to you in that ——"

"Gad!" he broke in, "Carry will think it's some of my old Arabic writing! It's not unlike it at all."

"All the better," said Tottie and the arrangement for secret correspondence was completed.

CHAPTER III.

Midharvest and shortening twilight; grand red-gold moons, calmly ruling the soft, scented autumn nights, as the southwest breeze came up, purring and kissing from the thickening channel mists. The Hon. Mark Wylde and his wife were disturbed in their minds as they sat out on a balcony in the "Royal" and gazed on the throbbing waves. A distant relative, a Major Ralston, had been staying down at the Marine Hotel, on the beach, for some days past, but it was only this evening that they knew of his even being in England. He had just left them, and in the course of conversation had imparted to the parents some information, partly true, partly mere seasurf gossip, that made them thoughtful. The upshot of their discussion was that Tottie was to have—for about the first time in her life—a serious "talking to" the following morning.

Eddie Keiller was lounging the next day about noon out on the lawn, wondering lazily what he should do with himself after lunch. His arm was nearly all right again now, and there were many amusements open to him, but they were all encumbered with one objection, company, and the man wanted to be alone. Only a month or six weeks ago he would have bounded with delight at the "company"—that of Carry Hall—which he now dreaded. In fact, a revulsion of feeling had set in, and Keiller was very unsettled in his mind, and very unhappy. He could not account for it; he had, from the very first hour he saw her, hungered and thirsted after the love of this splendid woman; and, now that he seemed to have attained it, it turned to bitter husks in his mouth. Had the winning been too easy? He had stuck to his absurd bargain with Tottie through pique and feverish irritability as much as for any reason, and now his darling little cousin seemed hopelessly lost to him—absorbing in that swaggering dragoon, with his bravado, his crimson-brown face, his uncouth oaths and his horrible bonhommie. The whole business since the accident seemed strangely unfortunate, and all was at sixes and sevens. He was out of sorts—ha! been for some time past—perplexed, miserable, and he almost wished that he had never seen the mesmerizing Carry Hall.

A soft, warm hand on his shoulder, a low, rich voice at his ear—"In the blues?"

"Yes, in the bluest of blues!" he answered, a little harshly, as he turned and met the searching play of the deep, dark eyes of Carry Hall.

"You are ripped, my poor fellow; bored to death at this stupid hole. You want a change—excitement. Let us stroll on the beach and talk of it. Come."

There was magic in those eyes, allurement in those tones, that Eddie (beginning to tire of them a little though he was) could not resist, and he went down with her. On the way he wanted to smoke, but he had forgotten his fusee-box, and almost swore, so irritable was he. Carry bought a box of common lucifers in a sweet-stuff shop just on the verge of the shore, and when they sat down on the shingle to talk, Eddie tried to light his cigar, but failed through the wind puffing the matches out one after the other.

"Try a piece of paper," suggested Carry, who well knew the soothing power of ignited tobacco on the system of irritated man, pulling two or three scraps from a little tatting-case she toyed with. But the last match he tried did light and he was soon exhaling clouds of perfumed smoke in comfort.

"Some of Sam's mems," she idly said, tossing the scraps away. One fell close to the arm with which Eddie Keiller was supporting his head.

"What is it? Not English, surely?"

"Arabic characters. He always keeps his private notes in it, for secrecy."

"Rum Arabic," said the other, picking up the penciled scrap and examining it. "Why, it's short-hand: "Dear Captain Hall, I have something very particular to tell you. Hello, that's warm, isn't it?"

"Do go on," entreated Carry; and he, with changing color (for he had caught the signature) and a forgetfulness of honor that would have been inexcusable under other circumstances, or in another man, read rapidly on, as follows:

"Something I heard to-day from mamma that I am afraid will put an end to all our jolly walks and fun together. I am so sorry, you dear old fellow; but matters must come to a crisis soon, and then—but here's that teasing Jack to take me to sketch the ruined chapel at Burcombe. He will wander off while I am drawing, and then you can come up, and we will settle everything. Not a second to spare. Yours, ever,

Tot."

Eddie Keiller's face had turned a deep scarlet as he translated the note; Carry Hall became deadly pale. She rose hastily. He had bounded up to his feet at the first few lines.

"I must stop this. I did not know my brother could act disgracefully."

She spoke in a passion but very determinedly. Eddie, too, was in a passion—turmoil of many conflicting passions, rather—and scarce knew what he said. There was a seaside pony chaise standing for hire at the end of the lane they had just come down.

"She is my cousin—a mere child—and her father does not know of this," he muttered hoarsely, as he made toward it, followed closely by Carry.

"To Burcombe—quick as you can," said Eddie to the sunburnt boy who squeezed in between them to drive—thus preventing, happily, any further conversation on the note—and away they went.

The ruined chapel at Burcombe, a couple of miles or so from Seasurf, stands picturesquely at the sea-end of a lovely dell, well-wooded, well-flowered, well-watered by a sparkling trout stream, and very well known as a trysting spot for lovers with art proclivities. It was called a "chapel," but in reality the shattered ruins of a good-sized monastery occupied the lovely spot; and it was not by any means easy to find any person who might be wanted, amid the numerous blocks of decaying buildings that crowded the undulating ground.

"So they've found us out at last, have they?" laughed out Sam Hall's jolly voice, as he wiped his heated forehead and sat down on a stone in an arched recess of the old ruin close by, where Tottie was making a pretense of sketching. (Her brother Jack had wandered away, boy-like, down on the beach.)

"Hush! there may be people about; don't speak so loud," warned the girl as she toyed with the dainty hat she had just taken off.

"All right. But what have they said about me—anything awful?"

"Oh, no! Only I am forbidden to see you any more in private. They found that out somehow. People do talk so. And I should not have been here to-day, only Jack and I arranged it so long ago. Mamma looked very odd when I told her I was going, and I shouldn't wonder a bit if she followed me, she seems so queer about it."

"About what?" he asked, lighting a cigar, and making himself comfortable by unbottoning his waistcoat.

"Well, about our—'absurd love-making,' she calls it." Tottie fairly burst out laughing, and Sam joined in with a boisterous guffaw.

"But what do you intend for the next move," he inquired, when he had half choked between tobacco smoke and laughter.

"I don't know, I'm sure. Everything seems to go wrong and thwart us," she replied, meditatively, and a gathering gloom creeping over her fair young face like a thunder-storm rising on a fair April day. "What can we do. We can't well run away—elope." She smiled again, but only a little, at the word.

"Why not? Jove! Just the right thing. Post-chaise to Fairpoint:—train—express, if you like—cross-country route—splendid!—bring 'em all to their bearings—old Eddie and all—in no time!" The dragoon was quite carried away with the enthusiasm the idea evolved in his romantic brain.

Hush—oh, do hush—you—well, dear old fool! there! People may hear you—and—"

"Well, but it would really be our best plan; wouldn't it now? Jove, it would stir the jolly old boy up though! But after us like a shot—?

"And your sister?" put in Tottie quietly. She was flushed with the eager conflict going on in her mind, but she spoke calmly; "what would she say of it? and, above all, what would she think of poor me after running away with her brother?"

"Oh, Car be hanged! she can console herself with some old fellow; old Eddie Kei—"

Capt. Samuel Hall never finished that sentence; his sister and Edwin burst out on them from behind the turret.

"She would think you a brazen-faced girl, Miss Wylde, to run away with a married man, as my brother is." So, Carry Hall.

"Some fellow,' as you are pleased to call me, will put a stopper on your game, Captain Hall," cried Edwin in a towering passion, going toward Tottie, who had bounded to her feet at the interruption, and now looked the picture of dismay.

"Oh, by Jove! here's the d—l to pay and no pitch hot!" groaned out the Captain, who was thunderstruck at the sudden appearance and words of his sister—he did not notice Keiller—just when he had expressed (in most uncomplimentary terms) his views on her future prospects.

"Do you mean to say that your brother is really married, Miss Hall?" asked Eddie.

"Really," she answered, flushing all over as the bitter memory of a sad misalliance came over her mind.

"You hear that, Tottie? The man's a—"

"Stop!" shouted Sam Hall, before the other could utter a word. "Miss Wylde became aware I was married a week or two after she first knew me. Did you not?"

"I did," answered Tottie, simply. She was regaining her calmness now, and her own darling Eddie had her hand once more in his with the old warm grasp that sent a thrill through her.

"And I knew it, too," said Master Jack, who had come up during the scene. "Why, Tottie, and I and Captain Hall were only serving you out in your own coin, when you went off on the high stilts after your tumble down-hill!"

"And you never told me your brother was married, Miss Hall!" said Eddie, in a rage at being deceived in so barefaced a manner.

Carry Hall drew herself up to the full extent of her stately figure as she answered him with great dignity mingled with scorn (for she had well noted of late how his temporary passion for her was waning); "I am not in the habit of gossiping about my brother's affairs, Mr. Keiller!" She made him a stately courtesy, turned on her heel, and left them with all the dignity of an injured queen; three minutes afterward they heard the rattle of the pony-chaise, and knew she was driving into Seasurf.

Then, and on the walk back, and in the pleasant family rooms at the "Royal," in the presence of Mr. and Mrs. Wylde, the whole business came out by degrees. Tottie, in the simplicity of her trusting nature, had turned Sam Hall from a flirting admirer into a friend, by disclosing to him her passion for her cousin Eddie, while he, on his side, told of his marriage, and between them, they concocted a plot of sham love-making, to pique the latter to return to his allegiance—Tottie's maid and Jack taking an active part in the performance by slily mentioning before Keiller the various places where the pseudo lovers were about to meet. Sam, of course, dared not tell his sister, because she held the secret of his wedded misery, and he did not wish it spread all over the place—for he knew her temper when aroused—and, as he justly remarked, "Car can pick up a good fellow anywhere—one spoon more or less will be nothing to her!"

But when Major Ralston, who knew the Halls well, so unexpectedly turned up, and informed Mr. and Mrs. Wylde of all the gossip he had heard at the Marline Hotel about their daughter and Captain Hall (at whose marriage Ralston had actually been present), the whole plan fell to the ground, and hence the meeting at Burcombe Chapel, that eventuated so differently from what had been expected.

There is no Tottie Wylde now; but should you this season visit that very excellent hostelry, the "Royal," at Seasurf, you would find plenty of people to tell you of her "device" to win back her cousin lover—"which her name is Keiller now, sir!" the staid head chambermaid said to us only the other day when narrating the little romance.
