very angry. He was proud, high-minded, and would most likely say many bitter things to her; perhaps praise his plebeian divinity in the highest terms, and end by declaring that he should consult his own taste in the matter and not hers.

Mrs. Read's nerves were very weak, but she must do her duty. So she went down to the breakfast room. Her Uncle and son were there, seated before a cheering fire. It was certainly a pleasant picture. The sun streaming in at the windows, and flickering across the nicely set table. From the massive coffee urn a delightful aroma was diffused throughout the room. Mrs. Read glanced around with a complacent smile playing upon her hard yet finely cut features. Should she speak her mind then? No, not untill breakfast was over, she thought, while she took her place at the head of her table.

"Coming events cast their shadows before," is an old saying. For this reason perhaps, the sumptuous meal was silent one. The blue eyes of the old man, which had all the summer of his life saved in their kindly depths, were bent steadily upon his plate. Mrs. Read thought his hand was more tremulous than usual as he raised his coffee to his lips. Philip's face—and a finer one is seldom seen, wore a grave and perplexed look.

There were several attempts made to start a little breakfast table conversation.
Philip bowed. The old man nodded.— Mrs. Read remarked that the night before she had thought that it looked like a storm.

"Indeed!" said Philip.
An hour later he could have observed that the signs were not to be wondered at, for the storm had come.

"I don't think from present appearance severe one," said Mrs. Read in a constrained voice.

"Neither do I," the old man spoke this time.

Mrs. Read smiled. She was particularly favored by this remark, as it led the way to the very object she wished to approach.

"Where do you intend to spend the winter, uncle?" she asked as she drew her knife through the juicy steak upon her plate.

Where did he intend to spend the winter? The question whirled through his brain like a bullet! It was fortunate for him that he was sitting instead of standing, because for a moment he was stricken so senseless—almost helpless.— The massive silver fork dropped from his trembling hand. The blue eyes, so full of summer, grew dim and misty, as if hazy autumn was beginning to look up from their depths. Where did he intend to spend the winter? This from her he had loved and cherished through a helpless and weary orphanhood! Presently a smile broke over his face.

"Thank God!" he thought, "I have lived seventy-five years before seeing such ingratitude!"

"What was that you said, mother?" inquired Philip, her words having just broke through the deep study he was in.

"Where is uncle William going to spend the winter? Isn't the question a strange one?"

The old man raised his eyes to Philip's handsome face. There was a world of thankfulness in their depths. He tried to speak but his lips were dry, and not a word could he utter.

"Not so very strange," answered his mother blandly. "Of course he has some plan for the future."

Philip's lip curled.
"I had thought so myself," he replied,
"and had never for a moment dreamed that his plan could possibly conflict with yours."

Mrs. Read smiled. Her features grew harder than ever. She looked towards her uncle, and her gaze was sharp and hard as steel.

"You wish me to find some other home —is that it?" he asked in a broken voice.
"I had thought you wished to do so," she replied.

"Mother, how can you!" exclaimed Philip.

"It shall be as you wish," said the old man, more in sorrow than in anger. "I shall find shelter somewhere, I know,— I have no fears."

He arose from the table as he spoke, and walked slowly out of the room.

Mrs. Read as he opened the breakfast room door.

He looked for a moment into her selfish face, but his mild blue eyes wasted their light upon marble. Her features did not change.

"Don't worry about me," he calmly said; "I shall be well taken care of.— Good morning."

He then closed the door and went up to his own room.

"What does this mean, mother," inquired Philip pushing back his plate and rising very hastily from the table.

"It means that I cannot be burdened with the old man any longer, and nothing more."

"I hope not; I should think it was enough! I trust your conscience is at ease."

"Perfectly, my son. Sit down if you please, I have something to say to you.
Will you tell me where you spend your evenings of late?"

Philip changed color. He did not expect this. The subject was a tender one.
He bent his eyes to the carpet for a moment, and then raised them to his mother's face.

"I was twenty-one years old more than three years since, if I remember right."

"I am aware of that fact, although I should not have known it from your actions. You conduct yourself more like a youth of eighteen."

The young gentleman bowed his head and bit his lips.

"You are very complimentary," he said,
"and certainly take a very indiscreet method to exert any influence over me."

"I wished to speak plainly to you, as a mother should speak to her son. I have your highest good at heart, and shall expect you to abide by my counsel and what you require. Well, what are they?"

"But my question remains unanswered.— Where do you spend your evenings?"

"In a place that is both interesting, pleasant and respectable."

"To you perhaps."

"Yes, to me—to every one. There's not a person living—"

"Be quiet, Philip," Mrs. Read broke in, holding her hand to her head nervously.
There is no use getting boisterous. It can be all summed in a few simple words.
You are forgetting yourself and your station by keeping company beneath you.— I do not say but this pale-faced beauty who has won your boyish fancy is well enough. I do not doubt that she is, but she is not your equal, and you wrong both yourself and her when you treat her as such. This intimacy must never result in anything serious—she is too poor for that; so I desire that it be broken off.
You understand me."

"If it is a boyish fancy it will die of itself. I think we can both afford to wait.
As to the safety which you may seem to think is so much threatened, I am in no way uneasy about it."

"There is no use parleying, Philip. I am your mother, remember! shall it be as I wish?"

"I will act honorably. That's all I can promise you. A son's honor should lie very near a mother's heart."

Mrs. Read's eyes flashed for the first time.

spend a few weeks with an old school mate."

"On C—street!" repeated Mrs. Read.
"Let me see!—what is your friend's name?" Mrs. Halmer.

"Has she a daughter, Lizzy?"
"Yes."

"What in the world put it into your old head to go there," exclaimed Mrs.
Read quite forgetting herself. "I am sure you are welcome to remain here as long as you please, instead of going to that place. Does Philip know anything about it?"

"O yes he proposed it to me. It is a very comfortable place. Call round and see me."

"No, not there. But haven't you been somewhat hasty about this? Wouldn't it be better for you to remain with me?"

"No, no! besides, I have an idea of making Lizzy my heiress."

"Your heiress!" said she. "I congratulate her! You are inclined to be facetious."

"Do you think so? Perhaps I am an old fool! Good morning, and much joy to you."

"Good morning."

Thus they parted. The old man went to the carriage Philip had sent, while his niece resumed her troubled walk up and down the breakfast room, her face as gloomy and lowering as a November morning.

A week had passed, and a bright, cherry morning was ushered in. Mrs. Read sat alone in her boudoir, her feelings quite out of keeping with the cherry splendor around her. She could find no pleasure in anything she heard or saw, so strong and deep was her anxiety for her son Philip.

As she sat thus, looking steadily into the fire, a ring at the door—

At the same moment that her door was thrown open, a voice began—"How are you Mrs. Read? I thought I would call round and see you. How pale you are looking!"

"Why Mrs. Wells, how are you? I am positively delighted to see you," said Mrs.
Read, extending her hand to the bustling little woman.

"Thank you," returned Mrs. Wells, "but have you heard the gossip? I suppose not, for it is just out."

"Gossip!" repeated Mrs. Read wonder-ingly.

"Nothing very straight out of it. Anno Wise told me about an hour ago.
Well, to begin with, there is to be a wedding on a most magnificent scale, at our church, at precisely 4 o'clock this afternoon."

"Indeed! Do you know who are the parties?"

"Nothing! and that is the mystery of it. It seems that a rich old grey-beard had made some poor but exceedingly beautiful girl his heiress, and she is about to marry into one of our best families. They say the young gentleman's family almost idolize her, and are beside themselves with joy. I suppose the old gentleman is some rich East Indian, who has discovered some poor relatives; so it will be a grand affair. Won't you dress and drive round to the church with me?
I forgot to say, the old gentleman has fitted up a magnificent mansion for the couple on T—street, and there is to be a grand wedding supper there this evening."

About three o'clock Mrs. Read was ready to accompany her friend, and they proceeded to church for fear that they might not be in time to get a good seat.

"Is it not queer there are no names out?" asked Mrs. Wells, as they seated themselves in the carriage.

tainly find the way to my own pew in spite of anything. Isn't this really delightful?"

Mrs. Read thought it was anything else; but she was too polite to disagree with her friend, so she forced a smile, as she held fast to her bonnet-strings saying "Very delightful, indeed!"

The pew was reached at last, thanks to Mrs. Wells' indomitable perseverance, and two or three misses were very unceremoniously elbowed out of it. Soon the crowd grew still and expectant. Mrs.
Read could almost hear her own heart beat. The half hour was almost gone.
Would the wedding party ever come?

What made her tremble so? She was thinking of her son Philip—poor anxious mother. She wondered if he was there.
She looked around—he was no where to be seen. It was in that part of the church, she felt she could see him.

There was a heavy rumbling of carriages outside the church, a pause at the door, a stifled whispering rippled through the crowd, and the solemn tones of the organ broke out upon the air in a grand anthem.

Mrs. Read kept her gaze fixed on the broad aisle. The party walked slowly to the altar. Of a sudden Mrs. Wells felt the grasp of her friend fixed upon her arm but she could not take her eyes from the bride, to learn what was her great trouble.

"My son Philip! Oh, what a terrible mistake!" gasped Mrs. Read, sinking back into her seat, and clasping her hands to her eyes.

"Gracious goodness!" exclaimed Mrs.
Wells; "is not this really splendid? Your son! And, as I live, it is your uncle who is giving away the bride! Oh, do not faint at this time. Look! What a magnificent veil she wears! Do look, just for a moment! Is she not a beautiful girl?"

And you knew nothing of it!
Mrs. Read!

The bridal party turned away from the altar; and the deep organ, as though a pulse of joy was beating in its great heart, gave out peal after peal of grand and delicious harmony. It fell upon the ears of Mrs. Read like a dirge. She had made a great mistake. She had turned a millionaire from her door. She had played a deceitful game, and lost!

MY NEIGHBORS.

CHAPTER III.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Bob-o-link! How many scenes of my childhood, in which you were my companions, rise to my view as I write your names! The strawberry field where you sat upon some bending twig with your head just above the buttercups, and sang to me while I gathered the luscious fruit,—the old orchard where I sat under an apple tree, book in hand, and watched the wheat-field, while the heated oxen cropped the tall grass blades and the weary laborers lunched, listening to the singing, jingling, melody above my head, wondering if there could be ought else on earth, in court or cottage, more sweetly beautiful, and if that bright world beyond yon fleecy clouds could produce music that would please me better,—if I could see birds in that beautiful world, and what some of the things were that made it so beautiful, aye, listening and dreaming, till the book fell unheeded from my hand and the eager animals had well nigh trampled upon the tender grain. But it was of you, Mr. Bob-o-link, not myself I proposed to write, and though I love you better than any other bird, will tell some of the names by which you are known and the mischief you are said to do in other places.

In the Middle States he is called the Reed Bird, on account of his feeding upon the reeds of the reed that grow in great abundance upon the banks of the river, though they make great havoc in the grain-fields, sometimes destroying whole crops, while the kernel is soft; in the rice growing states they are very numerous, and deal largely in that article, consuming it freely, and hence are called Rice Birds, or Bantings. In these regions they are considered a great luxury for the table, and found plentifully in the market. In the vicinity of New Orleans, they are known as Meadow Birds, and in some of the West India

Islands, Butter Birds; and in every place he is the same little sprightly songster, though his song and dress varies with the seasons,—both being most beautiful in spring. And while the female is setting, the song of the male is singular (she does not sing with him) and very pleasant; for two or three months they sing almost constantly, and so odd, rapid and abrupt are their notes, that it is impossible to describe them; though I did once see them written out and learned the words, but the likum, rinktums, sung in the best manner possible, would,
I think, sound very little like Mr. Bob-olink. The dress also of the male in spring is very beautiful; he is six or seven inches in length and nearly a foot in extent; the top of the head, sides of the neck, wings, tail, and lower parts, are a bright shining black; the other parts are pure white, cream color, and yellowish brown; his color changes and in autumn can scarcely be distinguished from the female which is a yellow brown, streaked with black and dusky yellow.
The nest is generally found in a field of grass, neatly made of dry leaves, grass, fine straw, and containing five blue white eggs, spotted irregularly with dark brown.
If they fill their crops with the crops of the farmer, they make him a good return in their delicious flesh and the labor they perform for him in the destruction of caterpillars on his fruit trees. As soon as the nights of New England become frosty and chill, they leave for the warm sunny region of the South. Good bye, neighbors, Bob-o-links, I shall expect you back to sing while I make my garden.

TIDINESS IN FARMER'S WIVES.

There is nothing that marks the character of a housewife so clearly and unmistakably as personal tidiness. It is no excuse to say that "I have had so much to attend to to-day, that I have not had time to dress," &c., and thus continue slovenly-looking all day. I am not willing either to admit that household duties should be a bar to tidiness in its proper sense. I do not mean that a person must be all the time "dressed up," but surly household work, of whatever kind, does not interfere with having a clean frook on, however common, a nice, plain collar, and a smooth head of hair. There is all the difference in the world in different housewives in this respect. Some always look bright and "smart;" but others never look decently clean in the mornings; they seem to have no idea that anybody ever notices their personal appearances while engaged in their household duties, or that it is a matter of the least possible concern to anybody. They forget that they have a husband, who was won when they were in full dress, and studied to attract him by the addition it gave to their persons, without regard to the time and trouble it required, whose eye is as sharp now as it ever was,
and whose sensibilities are just as acute.
He may not complain; he may have found out by sad experience that all complaint is futile; but he feels and suffers the change; and is forced to settle down into listless indifference, without a hope to brighten the future.

With respect to the children, also, what an example for them! The daughters will be educated in a sad school to take upon themselves, in the course of time, the chances of marriage, and the responsibility of a household. Mothers! you should set a bright example before your children in this as well as in other respects. The Bible says, "Cleanliness is next to Godliness;" hence, your teachings should embrace the practice as well as the theory of religion, especially in its every-day appliances in the family.

MARTHA.

HORSHAM, 3d Mo. 3, 1862.

MANURES.—Purify the atmosphere around house, sheds, barn-yard and barn, by transferring all manures collectable thereabout to the mowing lands, or compost heaps. Gather unripe weeds, refuse straw, etc., to absorb liquid manures in the bog pen and cattle yards, and remove and renew often. The health of your animals and the wealth of your acres will be promoted thereby.

News and State Items.

For nearly a year, says the N. Y. Commercial, Gen. Marcy has been acting as a sort of a "General McClellan." He is a experienced, accomplished and able officer. He has been an indefatigable worker and has enjoyed the confidence of Gen. McClellan. This, added to the fact that he was the General's father-in-law, entitled him to a seat, and where Mr. Chandler's speeches could be tolerated. General Marcy was not confirmed by the Senate. The marauders had their own way. Mr. Lincoln is almost perversely fond of standing by his own appointees. He has reappointed Gen. Marcy to his old position, to the great delight of those who would see real merit honored, and a partisan meanness of the vilest stamp rebuked.

As EVIL DEMANDING CORRECTION.—The Tribune publishes the following from a printed circular handed to its correspondent by a member of Gen. McClellan's staff:—

Harrison's Landing, Va., July 10. The press can do no better service to the military interests of the nation, than to persevere in attacking men absent under pressure of sickness. Robust or slightly wounded soldiers and men are parading the streets of the army, and who are needed here. Make it possible for any man able to do duty to be away from the army. Hold him up to the public view. Let him be ashamed to his duty. Make a residence at home, disgraceful to the soldiers. The local police should arrest any man improperly absent from his regiment.

Gen. Pope's order requiring the rebel forces, whose troops are located, to the army, has been liberally construed, and soldiers thinking it a license for free plunder, and ransacking through the country, killing chickens, sheep, pigs, and what else they could lay their hands on. It is doubtful if much evil does not spring from this in the guarding rebel property. It will cause ill feelings on both sides—on the part of the inhabitants, and with soldiers, some of whom have been severely punished by the rebels for preventing marauding. —Newbury Herald.

Gen. Pope's order requiring the rebel forces, whose troops are located, to the army, has been liberally construed, and soldiers thinking it a license for free plunder, and ransacking through the country, killing chickens, sheep, pigs, and what else they could lay their hands on. It is doubtful if much evil does not spring from this in the guarding rebel property. It will cause ill feelings on both sides—on the part of the inhabitants, and with soldiers, some of whom have been severely punished by the rebels for preventing marauding. —Newbury Herald.

The New York Post says it is not believed by some of our shrewdest military men that the rebels have more than 200,000 troops in the entire State of Virginia to day, and it may venture the timid to learn that the national forces, including those in Washington, Baltimore and Virginia cannot fall much, if any short of that number.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette, writing from Lexington, Ky., says three fourths of all the stores and manufacturing are closed. Every one wears a sickly and frightened look. The people speak of Morgan as though his name were to them what that of Richard the Lion Heart was to the Saracens.

A correspondent of the Argos says of Judge Walton:—

Judge Walton, in respect to years and experience "in the cradle" is youngest. He says little; writes little. But his face shows that his mind is storing up the facts presented, and storing the chief from the wheat as he goes along. He gives promise of a successful and brilliant career.

Erig. Gen. Nelson, on reaching Murfreesboro, on July 18th, issued an order directing the disloyal citizens to surrender at once all the United States property which the rebel troops had distributed among them. The order brought the uniforms and equipments to the court house by cart loads.

The gallant exploits of the Irish officers and regiments in the American war, are eagerly copied by the papers in Ireland, and the birth place and early life of each hero is proudly narrated. This has already stimulated a powerful Union feeling throughout the country.

The 63th regiment of Illinois reached Washington on Friday evening last. They were raised within ten days after the call was issued. The regiment contains 10,000 men, rank and file, and it is said to be as fine looking as any regiment yet enlisted.

The taking of Cumberland Gap by the force under Gen. George W. Morgan, is said to be the most damaging blow yet struck at the rebellion in Tennessee.

The quota of troops required from Franklin County is nearly or quite made up.

A CARD.
The undersigned would join with his wife in returning sincere thanks to the members of the North Star Boat Club for the many courtesies shown them during their stay in this neighborhood, and especially for the parting salute in the shape of six hearty cheers! I can but express the wish that their continued stay in the north part of the town will be as pleasant to them as I am sure it will be agreeable to those near whom they set up their tent.

HOUSEKEEPERS—troubled with vermin need be so no longer, if they use "COSTAR'S" Exterminators. We have used it to our satisfaction, and if a box cost $5 we would have it. We had tried poisons, but they effected nothing, but "COSTAR'S" article knocks the breath out of Rats, Mice, Roaches, and Bed-Bugs, quicker than we can write it. It is in great demand all over the country.—Medina (N. Y.) Gazette.

Miscellaneous.

A DRUNKEN PHILOSOPHER.—A somewhat noted writer for the Boston press, who died several years ago, was on one occasion found in the street intoxicated and taken to the watch house, where he was kept over night. On being brought before the police magistrate, next morning, he had become partially sober, when the following dialogue took place:

Magistrate—"Well, prisoner, what do you do for a living?"
Prisoner—"I am a public writer." Magistrate—"And, pray, what do you find to write about?" Prisoner—"A little to commend, much to censure, and very much to laugh at."

Magistrate—"Umph! and what do you commend?" Prisoner—"A handsome woman that will stay at home; an eloquent preacher that will preach a short sermon; and a fool who has sense enough to hold his tongue."

Magistrate—"What do you censure?"
Prisoner—"A man who marries a girl for her fine dancing; a working man who believes in the sympathies of professional gentlemen; a youth who studies law or medicine while he has the use of his hands; the people who elect a drunkard or a blockhead to an office."

Magistrate—"What do you laugh at?"
Prisoner—"I laugh at a man who expects his position to command that respect which his personal qualities and qualifications do not merit."

Magistrate—"Oh, I perceive that you are an utterer of pithy sentences; now I am about to utter one that will surprise you."

Prisoner—"A pithy sentence from your honor would indeed be a matter of astonishment."

Magistrate—"My sentence is, that you discontinue writing for the term of thirty days, while you rest and recruit yourself in the House of Correction."

So he submitted to the requirements of the Vagrant Act, and retired from the halls of justice, in company with the officer, without another syllable.

TRAPPING A TIGER.—An ingenious mode of tiger-killing is, that which is employed by the natives of Oude. They gather a number of the broad leaves of the praus tree, which much resembles the sycamore, and having well besmeared them with a kind of bird lime, they strew them in the animal's way, uppermost. Let a tiger put his paw on one of those innocent looking leaves and his fate is settled. Finding the leaf stuck to his paw, he shakes it, in order to rid himself of its nuisance; finding that plan, unsuccessful, he endeavors to attain his object by rubbing it against his face, thereby smearing the ropy bird-lime over his nose and eyes, and gluing the eye-lids together. By the time he has probably trodden upon several more of the treacherous leaves, and is bewildered with this novel inconvenience; then he rolls on the ground, and rubs his head and face on the earth, in his efforts to get free. By so doing he only adds fresh bird-lime to his head, body and limbs, agglutinates his sleek fur together in unsightly tufts, and finishes by hoodwinking himself so thoroughly with leaves and bird-lime, that he lies floundering on the ground, tearing up the earth with his claws, uttering howls of rage and dismay, and exhausted by the impotent struggles in which he has been so long engaged. These cries are a signal to the authors of his misery, who run to the spot, armed with guns, bows and spears, and find no difficulty in despatching their blind and wearied foe.

A COMPASSIONATE JUDGE.—A very learned and compassionate Judge in Texas, on passing sentence on John Jones, who had been convicted of murder, concluded his remarks as follows:

"The fact is, Jones, the court did not intend to order your execution before next spring, but the weather is very cold; our jail, unfortunately, is in a very bad condition; much of the glass in the windows is broken; the chimneys are in such a dilapidated state that no fire can be made to render your apartment comfortable; besides, owing to the number of prisoners, not more than one blanket can be allowed to each; to sleep sound and comfortably, therefore, would be out of the question. In consideration of those circumstances, and wishing to lessen your sufferings as much as possible, the court in its exercise of its humanity and compassion, hereby orders you to be executed to-morrow morning, as soon after breakfast as may be convenient to the sheriff and agreeable to you."

—Mr. Smith, I wish to speak to you privately. Permit me to take you apart for a few moments." —Smith—(who wasn't the least frightened)—"Certainly, sir, if you will promise to put me together again."

—The surrender of Norfolk was rather a sheepish affair:—Mayor Lamb surrendered to Gen. Wool, and the ram Merimac was blown up.

THE GREAT CAUSE OF HUMAN MISERY

Just Published in a Sealed Envelope—Price 6 cents.

A LECTURE BY DR. CULVERWELL, ON THE CAUSE AND CURE OF Spermatorrhea, Consumption, Mental and Physical Debility, Nervousness, Epilepsy; Impaired Nutrition of the Body; Lassitude; Weakness of the Limbs and Back; Indisposition, and Incapacity for study and labor; Dulness of Apprehension; Loss of Memory; Aversion to Society; Love of Solitude; Timidity; Self-Distrust; Dizziness; Headache; Affections of the Eyes; Pimples on the Face; Involuntary Emissions; and Sexual Incapacity, the Consequences of Youthful Indiscretion, &c., &c.

This admirable Lecture clearly proves that the above enumerated, often self-inflicted evils, may be removed without medicine and without dangerous surgical operations, and should be read by every youth and every man in the land.

Sent under seal, to any address, in a plain sealed envelope, on the receipt of six cents, or two postage stamps, by addressing, DR. CHAS. J. C. KLINE, 4127 Bowery, New York, Post Office Box 4586.

NOTICE.

THE undersigned, Selectmen, Assessors and Overseers of the Poor, of the Town of Bridgton, give notice, that they will be in session at the Town House, within said Town, on the first and third Saturday of each month, from one o'clock until five in the P. M., for the purpose of transacting such business as may come before them in their official capacity.

Families of Volunteers needing relief are requested to give their attention at the time and place above stated.
