Lahl and Music.

BY LUAH LEE.

Mingled with the fitful wailings, Of the gusty Ap il winds,

Comes the music of the robin.

He sings of sum ner coming,

Of fragrant rose and clover,

Promises yet unfulfilled.

That creep along the flor'

That amble at the casement,

And in the open door. I watched their thin forms lengthen,

I sit among the shadows,

And fields of waving grain.

And I think of other spring-times,

By rule blasts 1 so row chilled,

Cheered by birds of hope that caroled,

As the evening shales draw nigh,

And the stars light up the sky,

Loved friends est, anged or dead.

They conjure pleas ir s fled,

I've seen life's vernal season,

To se ve its wintry hours.

Still they sing of an hereafter,

With beighter prospects filled,

I've seen life's shadows lengthen,

And the eaten coming gloom,

By terrors of the tomb.

I recognize their coming, As harbing rs of light.

On, may existence ever,

And shadows ever herald.

A brighter light beyond.

My brightest hours they've darkned,

But lince I've learned that shadows,

With hopes songsters thus resound,

Are not children of the night,

Give place to summer flowers, And life's autumn fruits are garnered,

And the birds of hope still linger,

Though live's atmosphere is chilled,

That in the tree-top swings,
