

TOWN OF CASTINE, MAINE

RECORD OF BIRTHS

PREFACE

This booklet is a copy of the oldest birth records of Castine. In many cases, these names are the only visible identity of people who once lived, loved, worked, and died here. In other cases they live on in their hardy descendants or in the architectural beauty they created. Daily we enjoy the triumph of the human spirit they left as our legacy.

Read your way gently thru these pages. In Castine court, an Indian chief defended a tribesman who had killed a drunken white man in self defense. He declared, "Have we not all one father?"* Have we not indeed! Sheltered by such a family tree, we can say with Eric Frohm, "There's only one me"!

TOWN OF CASTINE

*(Inscription on the wall of the First Parish Church, Castine)

NOTE: In the "List of Families" it is to be remembered that Maj--abigwaduce initially was composed of Castine, Penobscot, and Brooksville. The name Penobscot was also used for the same area. In 1796 when Castine became incorporated, Brooksville, in part, was included in Castine. In 1817, that town, with additions, became the Brooksville of today.

In an effort to save an additional page, numbers 166-171 of the "List of Families" will be found on the Thombs page which offered the hospitality of a partially vacant page. These numbers include the William Winthworth family plus a single person.

The omission of "son born" or "daughter born" preceding the birth date has been observed unless the gender of a person was in question. No extraneous material is included except for a maiden name and several dates after the word died in the records & the initials v.k. denote these additions.

A further book of birth records was copied after the initial old records were completed. In this case, they were tucked in wherever they would fit without destroying the alphabetical order altogether. However, the last half dozen pages include the names which could not be fitted in and are arranged alphabetically.

The oldest records have been proof read several times with a magnifying glass since they are often scarcely legible. The latter names have not been copied with equal care.

As usual to one whose dexterity at the typewriter is not the equal of her zeal, the gremlins stalked these pages. It is hoped all their traces have been eliminated.
