Prohibition in Pennsylvania and R. I.

Pennsylvania has refused to adopt a prohibitory amendment by an overwhelming majority; and Rhode Island, by a no less decisive vote, has repealed the prohibitory amendment in her State Constitution. The result in both States was not unexpected, although the majority of 180,000 against constitutional prohibition in Pennsylvania was about double that anticipated. Massachusetts voted down a prohibitory amendment last month, but neither in that State, nor in Pennsylvania nor in Rhode Island does the vote indicate any decline in temperance sentiment. It is rather in the direction of practical temperance work, and a rebuke to the third party impracticables whose end and aim is to destroy the Republican party and place the rum-ridden Democracy in power. The Boston Journal says, in an editorial on "The Amendment in Pennsylvania":

There has been a great and steady advance in anti-saloon sentiment, and an increased readiness to adopt any practicable measures for the restriction of the evils which flow from the liquor traffic. But public sentiment, even in States where the anti-saloon sentiment is strongest, is not ripe for constitutional prohibition. In Massachusetts, the attempt to secure a prohibition amendment was made just as a system of high and restricted license had been enacted, but had not gone into effect. In Pennsylvania the attempt was made while a high-license law, of a peculiarly drastic character, was in operation, and had already greatly reduced the number of saloons and diminished drunkenness and crime. In each State the people declined to abandon the experiment just begun until its results had been fully and fairly tested. We do not see that anything is gained by trying to force public sentiment. The influences used must be persuasive and educational.

The result in Rhode Island is treated of at length by our able and well informed correspondent, Mr. Reynolds, to whom our readers are indebted for many excellent letters. Mr. Reynolds is a temperance man, but he does not hesitate to call a spade a spade.

It seems to this country editor, at least, as it does to many subscribers to country papers that this eternal nagging and "nassing" amongst rural newspaper men is a lamentable exhibition of youngness and at last becomes wearisome in its childish folly. [Dexter Gazette.

Our Dexter contemporary is right. At least that is the Journal's idea of it exactly, and we have never begun a controversy of this sort or engaged in one without great provocation. But there are times when forbearance ceases to be a virtue, and when one has not only to deal with "youngness" and "childish folly" but with malice and envy as well. There is no need, however, to waste much space on such a subject, and we simply commend to our bumptious contemporary of the Belfast Age the following suggestions from the New York Herald:

It is not well for an editor to think he must either be funny himself or quarrel with others in order to get on. Amicable relations pay better in the end and good temper smooths the rough way.

A. C. Buel, of Washington, D. C., consulting engineer of Wm. Cramp & Sons, was in Rockland last week buying fittings for an elegant yacht, 42 feet long, being built by C. D. Turner at Isle au Haut. [Deer Isle Gazette.

Some fifteen years ago Buel was a dashing Washington correspondent, and at one time associated with Don Piatt in editing the Washington Capitol. Of late years he has been prominent in the colony of summer sojourners from Washington, D. C., at Deer Isle. His graduating from newspaper work to consulting engineer of a shipbuilding firm is somewhat remarkable. We had supposed his "engineering" was confined to the lobby at Washington.

Dan Voorhees says that he would be glad to pay for a bottle of champagne every day for the pleasure of seeing Beverly Tucker drink it. Mr. Tucker is a very ungrateful man if he would not be glad to drink a bottle of champagne every day for the pleasure of seeing Dan Voorhees pay for it. Beverly would stand it as long as Dan. [Norristown Herald.

The funniest phase of this item, to those who know Voorhees, is that he always drinks at the expense of the other fellow, while Tucker, when in funds, is generous to a fault.

Apropos of the "darksome raven wing" controversy, which was not, however, as to tautology, the Waterville Sentinel well says: "It makes a difference with the critics whose name is attached.....A fault in a writer unknown to fame would not be noticed in a thoroughbred. In literature a distinguished name is better than riches."

Webb, of the Boston Journal, has again brought out the Camden candidate for Commissioner of Navigation as a great "admiralty lawyer." Why, if he undertook to enter an admiralty court without a pilot he would run ashore and bilge at the outer entrance.

Two fine poems will be found on the fourth page—"The Pine Tree State" by Frances L. Mace, and "Memorial Day, 1889," by Comrade J. H. Beale.

The Democratic papers are evidently much concerned about the minor appointments in the Belfast Collection District, and, as is usual, are saying a good many things that are not so.

Rhode Island Repeals Constitutional Prohibition.

SEARLE 10,000 MAJORITY AGAINST IT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE JOURNAL: Yesterday the voters of this State made up a second verdict upon the question of constitutional prohibition. A three-fifths majority was necessary to abolish the amendment. The figures quoted in the heading of this correspondence give that majority with something between five and six thousand to spare. At this writing the complete returns are not available but the final count will show little variation from the above.

On April 7th, 1886, the amendment was adopted by a little over 62 per cent. of the total vote cast. It is now rejected with a vote in its favor of a trifle over 25 per cent.

The repeal is most humiliating to Rhode Island, for this State has been proverbially conservative in tampering with its constitution. There now seems to be no more trouble in juggling with that heretofore sacred instrument than with any common law. The precedent is bad; the result demoralizing.

Much of the discussion that preceded balloting was inapplicable to the matter in hand, in that it simply portrayed the effects of dram-drinking and pointed out its menacing attitude toward public prosperity and morality. No arguments of this kind were needed. Every intelligent person knew all this. Reiteration thereof helped no voters to judge whether the prohibitory experiment should be continued or not. There was no conflict of sentiment between the desirability of temperance or intemperance. Conceding the latter to be an evil that ought to be exterminated, the real question was how best to restrain and control it until it is banishment might be decreed and effected. It was continuously urged that because intemperance was a curse the Prohibitory amendment was a blessing. But those who looked about them and saw the number of saloons increasing, and the pernicious traffic thriving in houses of the people and private clubs rooms, doubted the correctness of such reasoning. Prohibition, has been declared a signal failure. It has been a carnival of free rum, and free rum certainly is not a blessing to any community.

Many of those who honestly questioned it retaining the constitutional amendment was the best means of contracting miseries attending liquor consumption have been unfairly charged with being friendly to the traffic. When the rector of the most influential church in Rhode Island was called a "rummy" in company with brother clergymen eminent for their purity of life and progressive ideas; when some 500 leading business men, comprising many who are conspicuous for promoting temperance by exemplifying self-restraint, found themselves denounced as allies of the saloons by over zealous opponents, partisanship went so far as to react upon itself and nullify the results of tenable arguments that had been advanced. For quite a percentage of our voters claim that temperance is principally a question of private morality, rather than of public policy, and that it has no natural position in politics. Others, who are undoubtedly honest in accord with principle and practice, esteem liberty of conscience more highly as to prefer that every other person should determine his own course in the matter of drinking.

It remains to be successfully disputed that we possessed sufficient laws to annihilate the rum power previously to April, 1886. But public sentiment would not demand their active enforcement. Following constitutional prohibition came special legislation, more than has been afforded any other constitutional provision; yet with more stringent enactments has apparently come less efficiency in combatting the evil. More time and money have been given this law than any other, only to witness its inoperation.

The secret of our unfortunate attempt at enforcing prohibition is now laid bare to all beyond our borders. Three-quarters of the electors of this State are opposed to the impossible feat of saving to make the sum of sobriety rise higher than its scarve. The endeavor to legislate a standard of morality that Rhode Islanders couldn't control if" has proved abortive, as was safely prophesied would be the case.

Before prohibition was grafted into our constitution the State had on hand something over 3,000,000. It was boldly asserted that after adopting the amendment taxes would be reduced and the value of real estate would increase. Facts disprove both statements. Now the treasury is bare and the State tax has been increased fifty per cent., while taxation upon rum selling has been remitted. It has been estimated that a total of nearly one million of dollars has been sacrificed in attempting to make a large majority of citizens conform to the views of the minority.

The city of Providence shows forcefully the fallacy of opinion, as it is more directly interested in the result than smaller cities and towns. In 1886, the citizens voted with the stem of low license, that must signally gave a majority of nearly two to one for the amendment. Yesterday the vote to repeal was over four to one. While this significant action was principally caused by repeated evidence of inherent weakness of the law, there is no doubt that the vendict rendered two days previously in Pennsylvania had its natural effect in assisting undecided voters to a conclusion. The spectacle of staid Philadelphia rejecting constitutional prohibition after one year's experience with high license, and by the unprecedented vote of seven to one, must have influenced men smarting under the accumulating disgrace of rampant rum, while by another system the Quaker City was diminishing the monster's power.

Among other reasons for the outspoken abolishment of the amendment may be cited the refusal of Massachusetts to accept constitutional prohibition by a majority of nearly 50,000. And while we were unquestionably affected thereby, it is openly confessed that the farcial state of affairs in Rhode Island had considerable to do with the Bay State's decision. New Hampshire emphasized the action of our nearer commonwealth, while our next door neighbor, Connecticut, had years ago indelibly impressed the lesson of her hopeless four years' struggle under a very rigid law. Nor did it encourage men to vote for continued experiment with the prohibitory amendment to read that apothecaries in Maine had been granted the privilege of dispensing liquors on their own prescriptions; or that summer hotels dotting the charming coast of the Pine Tree State would be allowed to furnish wines, etc., to such guests as were habitual consumers of the like in the dining room and elsewhere. These were considered as backward steps on almost ransomed ground. The "vest pocket" vote was very conspicuous, showing that all who brought tickets with them did not propose to be cajoled into doing other than they had determined upon, nor indulge in joking a second time.

But Rhode Island is not advertising for sympathy in its humiliation. She has not revoked the statutory laws which forbid the traffic in liquor. This is not a "rum victory." We have not yet voted for any license. Rather has the State been making a candid inventory of its temperance assets in a calm and business-like manner. It is best in preparing all balance-sheets that values should be entered at real worth instead of fictitious estimates. The vote of three years ago created a false impression, even at home, as to our superior virtues in the desire for abstemious habits. In one month the official count will be declared. What will follow is uncertain, but it is probable that a special session of the Legislature will be called to take some action in the premises. Whether more stringent statutes or high license will be the outcome none can tell. But the impression is general that any change must be for the better. A worse state of affairs than has existed with a falsehood in our constitution cannot be imagined in a civilized community. Whatever reproaches are justly cast upon our heads we must bear. But from further stigmas regarding a violated constitution we are at last emancipated. Its remaining articles are no longer a target for contempt in company with one that has been scorned with impunity.

In a letter sent to the Journal April 12, 1886, it was said that "I did not believe in enacting laws that public sentiment will not sustain and enforce. And it was likewise stated that the expression of opinion was spasmodic and jocular in nature, inasmuch as a large number of pronounced drinkers hilariously voted for an amendment that no one supposed would secure a three-fifths majority. For writing thus I was sharply criticised, but my censor is not to-day quite so ready to denounce my accuracy or motives. Would that his exultation over our redemption had better foundation!

A Disastrous Fire in Boston.

Heyer Bros.' toy and fireworks establishment on the corner of Summer and Hawley streets, Boston, was the scene of a most disastrous fire late Friday afternoon. Five of the employes on the fifth floor, were either burned to death or killed in jumping from the windows. Many of the others had hairbreadth escapes. Two men secured release by crawling along narrow ledges in front of the building, and the others by sliding down the elevator rope. The continuous fusillade of the crackers and rockets gave the character of a mimic battle to the scene, and drew a dense crowd about the building.

Palestine to Dunlap.

THE VISITORS FROM BATH AND HOW THEY WERE ENTERTAINED.

Monday and Tuesday were gala days for the Knights Templar of Belfast. The occasion was the entertainment of Dunlap Commandery of Bath by Palestine Commandery of this city. Four years ago the Belfast Templars were royally entertained by their Bath brethren and this is the first favorable opportunity that Palestine Commandery has had to reciprocate. For some time the Belfast Sir Knights have been making preparations. Committees have been at work with a determination to make the occasion a memorable one in the annals of the order, and how well they succeeded remains for the visitors themselves to say.

STREET DECORATIONS.

Masonic Temple was profusely decorated with flags and banners. From the flag staff floated a white flag with a Maltese cross in the centre. From every window occupied by the Masonic fraternity depended banners bearing emblems of the order. From a wire stretched across Main street from the Temple to Mechlinock's block was a large white banner with a red cross for a centre containing the following—"Welcome to Dunlap." From Hayford Block to A. D. Chase's store, across the head of Main street, was another banner containing a Maltese cross and the words "Palestine to Dunlap," and at the entrance to the grounds of the Crosby Inn was an arch surmounted by a cross and crown and bearing the motto of the order—"In Hoc Signo Vinces." Under this arch the Templars passed in going to and from the hotel. The Belfast Opera House and Pierce's Parlor Theatre were connected by a bridge over Church street. The bridge was decorated with the American flag and red, white and blue bunting. At the centre was an arch from which the Belfast Electric Company suspended an arc light expressly for the occasion. The entrance to the Opera House was over this bridge and in the evening under the brilliant rays of the electric light the effect was grand. The banners were very handsome. They were painted by Mr. Percy A. Sanborn, and made by Mr. Geo. T. Osborne. The residences of many of the Knights were appropriately decorated. Dr. G. P. Lombard from his office on Church street displayed a flag and banners containing emblems of the order. The front of the Bramhall residence of ex Mayor Burgess on Church street was decorated and further down the street Col. Hiram Chase had out some flags. The portico of Col. H. E. McDonald's house was handsomely trimmed, and over the street in front of C. B. Hall's was a handsome white banner with a red cross for the centre, and beneath it—"Welcome Dunlap." On High street the houses of Col. Fogler, O. G. Critchett and J. C. Cates were prettily decorated. On Congress street the residences of Sheriff Wadsworth and Ex Mayor Charles Baker were trimmed, and on Primrose Hill James H. Howes displayed a flag "Welcome Dunlap," and O. G. White had decorations of bunting.

ARRIVAL AND RECEPTION OF THE VISITORS.

Monday morning Dunlap Commandery left Bath on a special train, which was due at Belfast at 1.05 P. M. Arrangements were made for a short stop, street parade and entertainment at Gardiner, and at that place Sir Knights Washburn and Littlefield from Belfast, met the visitors, the former to arrange for quarters at Crosby Inn, and the latter as an escort.

The steamer Rockland from Bangor, in the morning, brought the Bangor Cornet band and Andrews' orchestra, the former to accompany Palestine Commandery and the latter to furnish dance music. At one o'clock Palestine Commandery, C. B. Hall, Commander, with forty-six uniformed Knights, formed a line in front of Masonic Temple, and headed by the Bangor band or twenty pieces marched to the Maine Central station to meet the visitors. The train was late. On arriving Dunlap Commandery, Fritz H. Tattersell, Commander, and forty uniformed Knights, accompanied by the Togus Band, alighted and formed a line. They were courteously received by Palestine and conducted up street, both bands discoursing lively music. A large number of people had assembled at the station to witness the display and followed the procession on its rounds. The line of march was up Main to Church, down Church to Miller, down Miller to High and over High to the house of O. G. Critchett, where refreshments were served. The company then proceeded to the house of Ex-Mayor Burgess where they were further refreshed. The lines were drawn up on Mr. Burgess' lawn, some grounds and photographed by Mr. W. C. Tuttle. The line then moved up to Court street and to the Crosby Inn, where dinner was served.

"THEY MARCHED THROUGH THE STREETS WITH THEIR BANNERS SO GAY."

At 4.30 in the afternoon the regular march of the day was begun. Both Commanderies formed a line in front of the Inn and with their respective bands started on the march. Dunlap halted near school house common and waited while Palestine performed a courteous and thoughtful act. The Commandery formed a line in front of the residence of Sir Knight C. W. Haney. Mr. Haney, who had been active in making arrangements for the occasion, has for several weeks been too ill to leave his house and his companions had resolved on a serenade. The Bangor band stationed in front of the house played some appropriate music, while Mr. Haney, with assistance, and wearing his regalia, was enabled to show himself at the door. After this pleasing and kindly performance the column started, going over Court to Miller, up Miller to Cedar, over Cedar to Grove, down Grove to Church and over Church to the house of Mr. George W. Burkett, where the Commanderies and bands filed into the spacious and well kept grounds, and lemonade, ham sandwiches and bread and cheese were served. Mr. Burkett is not a Knight and his hospitality and courtesy were highly appreciated. The visitors were delighted with the magnificent view from Mr. Burkett's grounds. While in the grounds Mr. Hall, the corpulent ship builder, played several solos. When the Knights reluctantly left their hospitable entertainer they gave three cheers for Mr. Burkett. A halt was made in front of the residence of C. B. Hall, Commander of Palestine Commandery, and that gentleman was serenaded. The march was then resumed and continued to the residence of O. G. White, on Primrose Hill where refreshments were served. The line then re-formed and marched back to Crosby Inn for supper

AT THE OPERA HOUSE.

The Belfast Opera House was very handsomely decorated for the ball. A purple curtain hung from the arch over the stage, and parting in the centre revealed a white inner curtain bearing a Maltese cross. A purple banner depended from the arch in front of the curtain, upon which in gilt letters were the words—"Welcome," "Palestine to Dunlap." Red and white streamers were festooned from the arch, running down to and following the balcony front, all around, being caught up at regular intervals. The front of the stage was trimmed with bunting, and on the walls opposite were three banners, the centre one containing the coat of arms of Maine and the other two the American shield. On the rear front of the balcony was a shield and red cross and the motto of the order—"In Hoc Signo Vinces," surmounted by a Knight's armor. At intervals along the walls and balcony front were small banners containing emblems of the order. On the right and left of the stage were the banners of Phœnix and Timothy Chase Lodge of Masons. From the centre of the ceiling red, white and blue streamers radiated to all parts of the hall. With would be achieved by furnish wines, etc., to such guests as were habitual consumers of the like in the dining room and elsewhere. These were considered as backward steps on almost ransomed ground. The "vest pocket" vote was very conspicuous, showing that all who brought tickets with them did not propose to be cajoled into doing other than they had determined upon, nor indulge in joking a second time.

But Rhode Island is not advertising for sympathy in its humiliation. She has not revoked the statutory laws which forbid the traffic in liquor. This is not a "rum victory." We have not yet voted for any license. Rather has the State been making a candid inventory of its temperance assets in a calm and business-like manner. It is best in preparing all balance-sheets that values should be entered at real worth instead of fictitious estimates. The vote of three years ago created a false impression, even at home, as to our superior virtues in the desire for abstemious habits. In one month the official count will be declared. What will follow is uncertain, but it is probable that a special session of the Legislature will be called to take some action in the premises. Whether more stringent statutes or high license will be the outcome none can tell. But the impression is general that any change must be for the better. A worse state of affairs than has existed with a falsehood in our constitution cannot be imagined in a civilized community. Whatever reproaches are justly cast upon our heads we must bear. But from further stigmas regarding a violated constitution we are at last emancipated. Its remaining articles are no longer a target for contempt in company with one that has been scorned with impunity.

In a letter sent to the Journal April 12, 1886, it was said that "I did not believe in enacting laws that public sentiment will not sustain and enforce. And it was likewise stated that the expression of opinion was spasmodic and jocular in nature, inasmuch as a large number of pronounced drinkers hilariously voted for an amendment that no one supposed would secure a three-fifths majority. For writing thus I was sharply criticised, but my censor is not to-day quite so ready to denounce my accuracy or motives. Would that his exultation over our redemption had better foundation!

Davisville, R. I., June 21, 1889.

A Disastrous Fire in Boston.

Heyer Bros.' toy and fireworks establishment on the corner of Summer and Hawley streets, Boston, was the scene of a most disastrous fire late Friday afternoon. Five of the employes on the fifth floor, were either burned to death or killed in jumping from the windows. Many of the others had hairbreadth escapes. Two men secured release by crawling along narrow ledges in front of the building, and the others by sliding down the elevator rope. The continuous fusillade of the crackers and rockets gave the character of a mimic battle to the scene, and drew a dense crowd about the building.

The Democratic papers are evidently much concerned about the minor appointments in the Belfast Collection District, and, as is usual, are saying a good many things that are not so.

SEARSPORT INCIDENTS.

During the visit of the commanderies a gentleman from the suburbs inquired who the men were with the swords. When told they were TEMPLARS, he remarked "I don't suppose one of them would take anything if you offered it to him." His expression had evidently never led him beyond a Grange or Good Templars Lodge.

J. H. Sullivan, who had charge of the cannon at Searsport, fired a salute on the arrival and departure of the visitors. Many fine bouquets were presented by the ladies, among them some beautiful ones for the tables by Mrs. E. Hopkins.

Messrs. Grinnell, Putnam, McClure and Gould desire to extend their thanks to the friends who assisted at the reception of the visiting Sir Knights Tuesday.

Sir Knight Sawyer, of Bath, entertained the brethren at the grove by inducing some little girls to accompany him in singing. The juveniles acquitted themselves very well, and at the hotel they were joined by a large number of the brethren led by Sir Knight Littlefield, making a chorus worth hearing.

During the visit of the Sir Knights at Searsport many residences and places of business were decorated with bunting. The Searsport House had many emblems of the order. A large American flag was in the front and suspended across the side street, a large cross with the motto—"Welcome, Dunlap." A large flag was suspended across Main street with the word "Welcome" in evergreen letters. Sir Knight Putnam's house near the grove was adorned with emblems and flags. The entertainment of the Knights was by Grinnell.

RETURN OF THE VISITORS TO BELFAST.

The steamer Katahdin landed the party at Belfast about 5 P. M. The Bangor Band then took the steamer Rockland for Bangor. The two commanderies now consolidated and headed by the Togus Band marched up to Congress street, over to Franklin and down Franklin to Crosby Inn. Here the commanderies separated and were drawn up in two lines facing each other when Dunlap gave three cheers for Palestine which were responded to by the latter. Palestine then marched to the asylum, while Dunlap was marched to the ice cream parlors of Mr. John Carle on High street, where creams were served. These refreshments were tendered by Sir Knight Charles Baker, and were the last of the private entertainments. Supper was served at the hotel. At six o'clock Palestine escorted the visitors to the Maine Central station and they departed after the arrival of the regular train. While at the station the visitors chatted with the large number of people who were there to see them off. Cheers were given for Palestine Commandery and for the ladies of Belfast. The train went across the bridge, and the last seen of the visitors was a number of them on the rear platform swinging their handkerchiefs to the crowd.

THE VISITORS.

Among the distinguished of the visitors were Right Eminent Sir John Lord, and John W. Ballou, of Bath, Past Grand Commanders of Maine; Eminent Sir W. J. Landers, of Gardiner, Junior Grand Warden of the Grand Commandery; Eminent Sirs W. D. Mussenden, Past Commander of Dunlap, C. G. Carleton, H. W. Stuart, E. L. NOTES AND COMMENTS.

"I see a great improvement in your town," remarks the Sir Knight who had not been here for several years.

W. H. Fogler and G. P. Lombard, Past Commanders of Palestine, Belfast, were on the staff of the Eminent Commander of Palestine.

"The prettiest girls I ever saw," was the remark of a Sir Knight at the Opera House Monday evening, as he gazed at a bevy of five of Belfast's fair maidens seated in a row. Belfast is noted for its handsome women.

Among the Bath Sir Knights was Mr. O. Cahill, formerly in the dry goods business in this city. Mr. Cahill said he would have been pleased to have remained in Belfast, but is now well located at Brunswick in the dry goods business, and says he is getting his share of the trade among six others in the same business.

Major Landers, of the Kennebec Reporter, was the only newspaper man among the visiting Sir Knights, but he was abundantly able to represent the fourth estate. Major Landers is Junior Grand Warden of the Grand Commandery, and was the only one of the board of Grand officers present.

The badge of Palestine Commandery was a very fine one, printed from a steel plate made in New York expressly for the order. The badge is three inches long and three wide with fringed end. The badge represented an armoured Knight ready to do battle for the cross. In the background were trees and a castle. Below were crosses interwoven. The inscription was as follows: "Palestine Commandery No. 5, K. T., Belfast, Maine. Welcome to Dunlap Commandery No. 5, K. T., Bath, Maine, June 24, 25, 1889." The badge of Dunlap was six inches by two and a half, printed on red satin with gilt fringe, and presented a mounted Sir Knight. The inscription was "Dunlap Commandery No. 5, Knights Templar, Bath, Maine, to Maine Commandery No. 5, Belfast, Me., June 24, Palestine Commandery No. 12, Belfast, Me., June 24, 25, 1889."

The Trip to Coney Island played at the Opera House by the Togus band represented the following: "Rush to the boat. All aboard" whistle. Life on the ocean Waves. Italian ball playing on board the steamer. Appearance of Jubilee singers. All ashore! whistle. Carousals. Passing a few reminiscences. Appearance of Street Band. Entering West Brighton Hotel, the greatest living Comedist is heard. A heavy Thunderstorm comes on with Thunder and Lightning. The clouds are breaking and sunshine follows. Arrival at Brighton Beach where Schell's famous Orchestra is heard, boarding the Marine Railroad, train arrives at Brooklyn Bridge just in time to hear Gilmore's Band perform the Anvil Chorus, introducing 500 Anvils. Signal for Paine's Fireworks is heard, followed by cannon shots and imitation of skyrockets. After a grand rush for the home-bound train. Home, Sweet Home concludes the piece."

Waldo T. H. B. Association.

The Executive Committee of the Waldo Trotting Horse Breeders' Association will hold a session next Saturday at 10 A. M. at the secretary's office No. 16 Main St., to arrange various matters preparatory to the first annual meeting or trot at their park in this city, on Tuesday and Wednesday, August 13 and 14, and which undoubtedly will bring out the largest crowd and show the best trials of speed ever witnessed in this part of the State.

The horses which promise to come to time are the noted stallions Haroldson, Elmbrook and Thackanban in the stallion sweepstakes; in the 2.40 stallion class, Day Dawn, Ledo, Prince Withers, Young Thack and Young Gideon; and in the 2.45 free for all Kahula, Jenny Lind, Miss Ledo, Harry P., D. L. and Hardware.

In the colt classes there are paid entries: Yearlings, 5; 2 years old, 11; 3 years old, 4; 4 years old, 5. These include the most promising youngsters in Waldo county, and it will not be surprising if there prove to be some record breakers among them.

The committee having charge of the matter are pushing work on the park. The track is now ready for use by the members, the fences are being repaired, grading done and twenty-five stables have just been finished and will at once be occupied by some of the best horse flesh in the State for training for the meeting.

Members who have not obtained their certificates will please do so at once of the secretary, as above.

Where are the Mackerel?

Several seiners which arrived at Gloucester last week report cruising along the entire New England coast and seeking no mackerel. This is disquieting, not only to the fisherman whose livelihood depends upon the catch, but to the many thousands who are thus deprived of an excellent food fish that was formerly abundant and to be had at a reasonable cost. The fact that this season's scarcity of mackerel is not exceptional, the supply having diminished steadily for several years, makes the matter more serious. Scientists have told us a good deal concerning the habits of migratory fish, but they have not explained the disappearance of this favorite food fish, while, as the Boston Globe says, "the fishermen have puzzled their heads for some years to find a solution, with only the one definite result of a steady decrease of the mackerel catch staring them in the face." The Globe says further:

It is a serious question whether the whole seining method does not have the ultimate effect of so worrying and depleting fish that run in shoals that they will be driven constantly further hunted, they finally retreat to isolated places for safety, and if followed there leave the region altogether. Some of the most experienced fishermen who have studied the movements of these hotly pursued fish for years have become convinced that this is the case, and freely affirm it.

On the other hand many fishermen contend that seining would not affect the supply, and it is difficult to see how hand-line fishing could supply the present demand for fish.

The Pine Tree State.

BY FRANCES L. MACE.

Read at the reunion of state of Maine Association, at Oakland, Cal., May 11.

No song more deeply moves the hearts of men
Than "Home, Sweet Home;" long years may intervene
Since lingering eyes viewed last the cherished scene,
But in that strain all childhood lives again.
In every race this passionate home love dwells,
Where life is rough and rugged, ignoble and mastery,
The scant, sweet days of sunshine are more dear
Than where long summers weave their languor-mist spells.
No tropic bloom such gladness can bestow
As the first Mayflower peeping through its veil of snow.

To us what picture flashes on the brain
When Home is sung or spoken? We behold
A landscape wide and beautiful and bold,
Rugged in highland, fair and rich in plain.
The background is of forest, pathless yet
But by the hunter's track, or bayed canoe
Silently threading streams that ripple blue
From where Katahdin's spectral throne is set.
Katahdin's where cold, crystal light is seen
Awful in wintry morn above the pine woods green.

Our rivers' resonant Indian names may seem
Harsh and unmusical to strangers' ear,
To us the syllables are soft and dear,
And bring to mind a picture right the gleam
Of Saco, turning swift the busy loom,
Of Androscoggin, racer of Bowdoin's boom,
Of Kennebec, whose placid waters flow
Through willow banks and field of orchard bloom.
What leaf bowered villages those borders throng!
What sounds of happy life flow with those waves along!

Highway of ships from farthest foreign port,
Penobscot! let me name thy name once more!
I see thy calm, majestic current pour
Past cliff and rock, pale gold and gray to sport,
Till where the broad bay mingles with the sea,
A hundred islands, blossoms of the wave,
Their summer beauty lovingly lave
And listen to thy wood-born minstrelsy.
Beautiful path! by which the brave Champlain
Famed Normandy sought, in the new world of Maine.

We count our lakes, like billowy inland seas,
Our granite heights in many a lofty line,
Cities whose spires from distant hill tops shine,
Half hid in orchards and in shade trees,
And—pleasure garden for the world, behold
Mt. Desert cradled on the summer sea!
Mocr arts—enchanting work is vocal!
Outdoing Nature, her own triumphs hold.
A land of marvellous beauty is our heart,
Walled by two thousand miles of adoring ocean guard.

And what her record upon history's page?
What honors has she that can call our own,
Dwelling afar within this outer zone?
What lights or beacons to the passing age?
Old are her annals—old as the pilgrim's staff.
That when the pilgrims touched the frozen beach,
An Indian chief in hearty English speech
Welcomed them, and showed them corn to plant.
Even then was Pemaquid an open door
To commerce, not pent closely, open all hours since.

Then forest sagamore and plumed warrior,
Hooded and French, the gentle Jesuit Priest
Among them, wooing to the sacred feast
And fast of Rome, with earnestness sincere
But cruel fate and ruler strength were they
Who imbibed bravery inhabit than the bay.
Changing the wild wood to the fruitful plain.
Then forest chief and priest fell to the ground,
And while along our coast the swift response was heard.

Fitting it is to sing to-day
Of those Belgravia's pride, the gentle Sir
Sir Henry Vane, young to the sacred feast
And Fast of Rome, with earnestness sincere
But cruel fate and ruler strength were they
Who imbibed bravery inhabit than the bay.
Fitting in song their memory to revive,
Fitting in song their memory to revive,
Who, with
