Museums, library to offer sense of past

BUCKSPORT AREA — The historical museums of East Penobscot Bay and Blue Hill Peninsula are staging a "Touring through Time" weekend event.

On Saturday, July 27, from 10 to noon people can visit the historic Buck Memorial Library at 47 Main Street, and see photos and historic documents relating to the history of Bucksport and its founding families. The building was built in 1887, and retains all of its original finishes and woodwork.

On Saturday and Sunday, July 27 and 28, from 1 to 4, the Bucksport Historical Museum in the depot at 92 Main Street built in 1874, will be open. The railroad station was added to the National Register of Historic places in 1975. Featured will be many of the artifacts from the Admiral Richard Peary expedition to the North Pole. Peary sailed into the Arctic aboard the Roosevelt, an especially sturdy vessel crafted on Verona Island.

The historical societies in Castine, Penobscot, Brooksville, Deer Isle-Stonington, Blue Hill and Surry each have special events planned July 27 and 28. Also cooperating on the project with additional displays are the Sargentville Library, the oldest library on the Blue Hill Peninsula, and the Brooklin Keeping Society.

Their shared theme is, "Keeping our Past, Present."

The Buck Memorial Library and the Bucksport Historical Society will have copies of the free brochure to the various exhibits, the museum's websites and the telephone numbers of the participating groups.

One museum is offering, "a rare chance for a photo op with a genuine smelt tent." In Sargentville, visitors can learn about the Maine Lake Ice Works. And there are Bucksport walking tour maps.

Why Does My Cat Look At Me Like That? That's the title of former Bucksport veterinarian Dr. John H. Hunt's book.

Subtitled, "Ponderings of a Small Town Veterinarian," Hunt will hold a book-signing at the BookStacks shop on Main Street on Thursday, July 25, at 5 p.m.

Hunt relocated to Eliot a year-and-a-half ago, but continues to return to this area once a month to do two radio shows at WERU in East Orland.

His collection of short essays covers all aspects of pets, ranging from medical conditions and pet care to what it was like practicing for 27 years in Bucksport. He includes his personal experiences as a veterinarian, and as a pet owner, a view or two about Maine and Mainers.

Hunt now also teaches in the veterinary technology program at York County Community College in Wells.

All of the deals are where-is, as-is, and those who deal in such vehicles know the rest of the details.

Planning bigger

To get large projects done a community first must be able to routinely handle the myriad small tasks that keep a town in good working order. This newspaper previously has praised the Town Council for urging a faster pace on road project repairs and renovations. Nobody wants to see the horrible state of getting from here to there deteriorate. Look only to EDITORIAL Bangor's bone-jarring streets. Do those reflect prosperity and pride?.

Perhaps it's time for our town councilors to take a field trip. Why not start at the entrance to the transfer station? Virtually every resident of this town or their representative makes this trip regularly, and they've got the damaged shock absorbers to prove it.

Then the councilors could check the entrance to the Main Street parking lot next to Community Pharmacy, another favorite spot for those doing business downtown. There are patches in the patches, and cracks in the cracks.

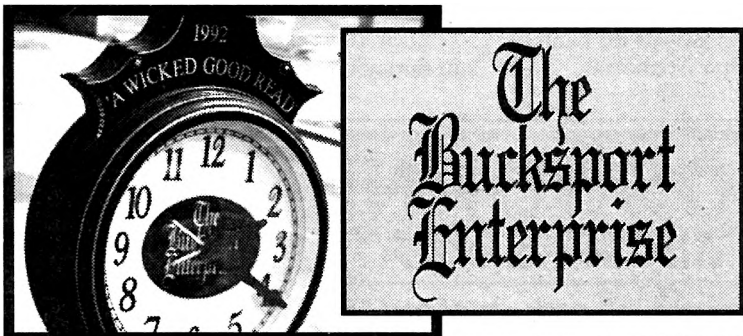

Or, perhaps, the councilors could take the road to the parking lot that serves the Town Council Chamber and the pavement into the Municipal Offices building. The missing chunks of pavement, the frost heaves and major cracks have been there for at least the past three winters.

Each of the councilors can add their own favorite spot to the tour, for they were the ones who called for a new ambitious road maintenance plan to be drawn up. But why wait when there are several very visible improvements that could be made speedily and at minimal cost? Fixing things shows we care.

Now for the big projects . . . like the swimming pool that everyone who grew up here or ever held elected office in recent decades knows is essential to a Bucksport summer. The councilors can appoint a committee, review what's been reviewed so often: the pool is leaking big-time, and it's past time to take action.

Yes, fiscal conservatism and fear can kill a major, long-term solution. But why not think a little less conservatively and harness some of the new entrepreneurial spirit? Let's encourage some of the executives that have selected Bucksport to grow their businesses to share their expertise. They wouldn't be building major projects here if they didn't know how to quickly get the most for the best price.

Let's not act like we already know what's best. Invite the leaders of Whole Oceans, Maine Maritime Academy, Pemaquid Mussel Farms, Tradewinds, Greenhead Lobster and the others to share their thoughts. These people are too busy to get bogged down: they set goals, evaluate the options and take action. We're talking about a simple swimming pool here. What these entrepreneurs and administrative leaders know getting things done is worth knowing.

Is this what the sculptor had in mind?

An internationally recognized piece of Schoodic sculpture rests on Bucksport's waterfront, providing a granite counterpoint to the steel cables of the Penobscot Narrows Bridge and Observatory.

Did the sculptor, Matthew Foster of Maine, have a bird perch in mind when he installed the granite structure on the waterfront in 2014? Maybe he did, for this is what he said at the time, "For this sculpture, the inspiration came from the people and the landscape of Bucksport. The residents' sincere wish was for a sculpture for the children of Bucksport, and the generations of tomorrow. With this in mind, I created a piece that reaches back into Bucksport's maritime history and its connection to the natural world around it." Surely birds are of "the natural world."

— From the margins —

Tasting the 'Spirit of Ecstasy'

Some months ago the folks poking around the nation looking for interesting things to re-sell fell upon the long-forgotten van/touring vehicle of Aerosmith. There it was at the end of a gravel road, in the bushes with a tree growing through the floorboards and out one of the windows. Generally the thing was in what most would consider deplorable, unsalvageable shape. But the Aerosmith artwork still was on the side panel, and a piece of musical history was slightly but very lovingly refurbished.

On the other side of the same small western Massachusetts town was a nondescript cottage, one in less than Better Homes & Garden shape. But in that cottage, located where the pavement became dirt, dwelled one Arnold Skolnick.

Skolnick bought the place with the first royalty check he received for having designed the iconic, more than slightly psychedelic poster that screamed Woodstock! Yes, THE Woodstock poster!

That was the first of what were to be many royalty checks received through the years.

Tiny town. Tucked away with so much musical history. Who knew? Most of the neighbors just ignored celebrities, or found those who had brought forth such treasures interesting folks, not because of their fame, but because of who they were as people.

A lot further down the road a piece, also tucked away in the Berkshires so only the locals knew who resided there, was another treasured musical hotspot, the home of one Arlo Guthrie. His place was just down the road a piece from - yes, you guessed it - the fabled Alice's Restaurant.

From time to time, the folksinger extraordinaire, the heir to Woody ("the man of the people") Arlo Guthrie would climb into his wheels - a Rolls Royce, can you believe it? He then would silently motor through the town where the Aerosmith van was abandoned and Skolnick now resided to reach another small town. That village housed a Catholic church, so small the cardinal didn't even know it was there.

The Rolls, safely stowed in the empty parking lot, Mr. Guthrie (if you didn't know him you certainly shouldn't call him "Arlo") would go inside. His visits tended to be in the late afternoon when no other parishers were around. After doing whatever he came to do, he'd emerge and not be seen there for a month or two, or perhaps, just the very next day. You never knew.

Why he was there was nobody's business. New Englanders generally don't poke into the business, especially the spiritual business, of people whose families they have not known for at least a generation.

Still, seeing that "Spirit of Ecstasy" hood (or "bonnet", if you prefer) ornament sliding so effortlessly through a tiny town where most couldn't tell a Rolls from a Bentley always was inspiring.

A glimpse of that shiny sculpted woman leaning forward, her arms outstretched behind and as if about to effortlessly lift from the ground is all it took. Janis Joplin could have her Mercedes Benz; give me a "Spirit of Ecstasy" bonnet ornament.

To get one though I'll have to go back to that little town to see if I can score another Aerosmith van - or, perhaps, a crisp-from-the-tube Skolnick original.

— DON HOUGHTON

LETTER...to — and from — the editor

Thank you! We're back!

This column usually begins "To the editor . . .", but this week it's "A letter from the editor." As we notified readers and advertisers on June 27, it was necessary to shut The Bucksport Enterprise for a week.

This was done to allow the doctors to surgically remove a sum from the editor's insurance plans, and the operation appears to be a fine success. (The checks also apparently will clear the banks, providing at least a tiny boost to the area's economy.)

Here, I want to thank all of the many who offered to pitch in to help, those who sent their well wishes, e-mails and cards and the many advertisers, readers and colleagues who went out of their way to be accommodating.

Sandy Holmes, the general manager and doer of all that needs to be done here at the Enterprise, no doubt, could have published the paper without the editor's help. Still, we decided it was better to just a skip a week.

— Don Houghton, Editor & Publisher

P.S. Publishing the Enterprise is more fun than having surgery.

— Code enforcement officer

In his three-sentence resignation letter to Lessard, Hammond wrote, "It has been my honor to serve the citizens of Bucksport for 21 years."

He also offered "to help with the transition in the code enforcement office."

His resignation also covers his duties as the town's plumbing inspector, street address assigning officer and as recording secretary for the Planning Board and the Board of Appeals.

The resignation triggers access to his retirement benefits through the program covering town employees. He also can elect to take Social Security benefits due to his work in the private building sector prior to joining the municipal staff.

Because he resigned, the town has no obligation to provide any additional compensation under the terms of his contract, the town manager said.

While he worked in building homes both as an employee and self-employed, Hammond said in an interview he has no plans to seek other work at this point.

He noted that he opted for the public job because as he grew older the physical demands of building houses had begun to take their toll on him.

The Brewer resident may be the longest-serving code enforcement officer and plumbing inspector in the town's history.

Hammond long has been known for his meticulous attention to detail, and for years has been the managers' go-to person for crafting new regulations or updating old ones.

His detailed research on even the most-mundane of issues frequently spawned lengthy presentations of his findings to the Town Council and the Planning Board.

At times in recent months the councilors had called for streamlining some of the confusing of conflicting language in the town's rules, only to find Hammond submitting major rewrites of the rules.

The councilors then would send the initial drafts back for rewrites, only to find themselves

What's next for code enforcement?

BUCKSPORT — The town manager's going to take a fresh look at the job of code enforcement officer and the other duties that regularly are carried out in that office.

In an interview this week, Susan M. Lessard praised Jeffrey C. Hammond for his dedication to the town for over two decades. However, she said his retirement is an opportunity to rethink the duties he's been performing.

Lessard may open that discussion when the Town Council takes up Hammond's resignation letter tonight (7/19), but the review process may take a few weeks, for before posting the vacancy, Lessard said she wants to explore, "what sort of job we will be posting."

The code enforcement officer and the fire and police departments often are doing building inspections that can overlap. Whether that will result in a closer, more formal link has not been determined, or even publicly discussed.

spending considerable time at another meeting trying to decide whether the new language was an improvement or not.

There also have been some differences in how the existing codes should be enforced, with some on the council pushing to reduce the number of derelict or dilapidated structures in the town.

Those efforts sometimes resulted in the councilors being dragged into occasionally heated discussions with those who owned the buildings in question.

There also have been numerous warning letters, violation notices and even — with the council's approval — court actions.

At times Hammond has been accompanied by police officers to inspection sites when he thought there could be a possible confrontation. In other cases, the repeated visits resulted in voluntary clean-ups and renovations to meet life safety and building codes.

Like code officers most everywhere, the post could become something of a lightning rod, with some seeking more enforcement, while others urged a more relaxed approach.

Hammond has sought to be consistent, knowing one precedent can yield many to cite one case to buttress their position.

He also maintained a meticulous office, one where it seemed he could gain instant access to documents that were ten and even twenty years old. The files in Hammond's office are arranged neatly, and many files have been color-coded. Those up-to-date files should make it easier for his successor.

Through the years, Hammond also has amassed photos and video recordings of every major project and nearly every controversial one he has processed through the years.

Few Planning Board or council meetings have been complete without one of Hammond's visual presentations of what he has found in his archives or while making his rounds.

Six years have passed since our Lord, so suddenly, without warning called for you. Forever etched upon my heart is that Sunday morning, surrounded by the mountain, trees, and flowers growing wild, without a hug or a kiss goodbye, you were gone. Rick, I cherish, so much our last conversation on July 4th, not knowing at the time, it was to be our last. My life for fifty two years was blessed in being your mother.

free ice cream,

LAPPED
IT UP!

The first of this summer's Kids on Main series for those 9 and younger was launched last Saturday. Each youngster got to listen to a story and then select a brand new book to begin their very own library. And, oh yes, there was free ice cream, too.

Backed by a number of businesses and civic sponsors, the weekly events run from 11:00 to noon each Saturday through August 17, just off Main Street, next to the Heyward House.

The books are courtesy of the Literacy Volunteers of Maine.

The event generally will be held in "light rain" or shine.

Join us to celebrate nearly a century of papermaking in Bucksport through readings from Patricia Ranzoni's anthology, Still Mill. By turns funny, raw, emotional, and occasionally horrifying, Still Mill paints a vivid picture of all that was good and bad during our 80 years of papermaking. Ms. Ranzoni, Bucksport's Poet Laureate, will read, as will Maine Poet Laureate Stuart Kestenbaum and other contributors.

Preserved artifacts from the paper mill and specially designed art will be on display, there will be music, and copies of Still Mill will be available for purchase and signing by Ms. Ranzoni and others. Proceeds of all book sales go to the Bucksport Historical Society for a permanent papermaking display. Mel Allen, Editor, Yankee Magazine, will facilitate. Refreshments.

Coming home to ORRINGTON

ORRINGTON—The Town of Orrington will celebrate its annual “Old Home Week” from tomorrow (Friday, 7/12) through Sunday, July 21, with over 30 events all around the community.

Old Home Week celebrates, “Orrington’s rich past, vibrant present and bright future.”

Residents, friends and neighbors gather to share the best of Orrington’s colorful history, distinct villages, natural resources, schools, businesses, churches and organizations.

This year, Old Home Week events will kick-off with the “Wicked Muddy Mainer” at Thornton Family Campground on Saturday, and end with the traditional “Endless Yard Sale” July 19-21. Every day will be filled with events for all ages.

The great outdoors will be celebrated in a variety of ways.

The Wicked Muddy Mainer contestants can test their endurance in a brand new, very muddy, 20-obstacle, obstacle course race! Participants can create teams or go at it alone in 120 acres of sweat, mud and tears, where you never know what’s waiting for you in the next challenge. The only thing that’s certain is the drivers won’t come out clean! Registration is closed, but spectators are welcome.

The Orrington Conservation Commission has organized a geo-caching contest, with prizes, all week to introduce everyone to public areas available for recreating and relaxing: Picnic at the Penobscot Riverfront park; hike the Richardson Tract atop King’s Mountain; relax at Clark Falls; launch a kayak at the Sedgeunkedunk Fishway and paddle to Fields Pond; launch a boat on Brewer Lake and tour, fish, swim or ski.

The Fields Pond Audubon Center will offer five nature programs for children and adults. The “One Health” Approach to common loon conservation will take place on Friday (7/12) at 7 p.m. Join Mark Pokras, a retired Tufts University professor at the Center for Conservation Medicine, and Brooke Hafford MacDonald, a research assistant at the University of Maine for a discussion of current and future research on loons as “sentinel species” the implications for environmental conservation. Maine Audubon members can attend free and others are being asked for $8. Space is limited, register online at www.maineaudubon.org or call 989-2591.

Bug catching is on the agenda for the Saturday 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. “Insect Bio Blitz!” Participants will collect data and record species of insects found at Fields Pond. Discovering a new insect species is not out of the question. Instruction will be provided and entomological experts will be on hand.

Youngsters can sign up for the Explorers (7-9 years of age.) day camp that runs from July 15-19. Each day brings a new theme, including hikes, creative arts, recreation and nature study. To register go to www.maineaudubon.org.

The Moonlight Canoe Paddle on Fields Pond is an annual treat. Spend the evening in the glow of moonlight with fellow paddlers on Fields Pond on Wednesday, starting at 7:30 p.m. for a guided naturalist paddle. The group will meet at the Fields Pond boat landing. Bring a canoe or kayak or reserve a seat on one of our canoes for an extra $5 fee. Members pay $8 to participate while others are charged $10. Register at www.maineaudubon.org or call 989-2591.

Celebrate summer at Fields Pond on July 20 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. for a day of family friendly activities including events on the Pond, along the Fields Pond waterfront and in the nature center. Some of those activities include: a salmon celebration and Turtles of Maine -Live!

Football: It's a game of numbers!

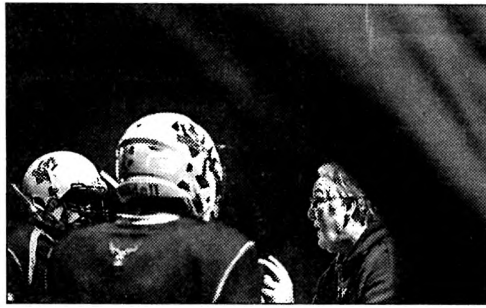

BUCKSPORT — In an effort to combat falling numbers in the local youth football program, this season will be designed in a way intended to drop barriers of entry, and focus on a more developmental approach for third and fourth graders.

The Bucksport Youth Football program has joined with Ellsworth, Mt. Desert Island and several other leagues to offer "flag football" at this young age level.

The goal is to build interest in the sport, focus on developmentally appropriate skills, make entry accessible for new players and retain or grow enrollment throughout the middle and high school years.

The third and fourth grade tackling has been managed well in over a decade of its existence here.

With understandable parent and coach concerns about chronic traumatic encephalopathy and supportive research on the subject, there would be a decline in participation because of concern about long-term brain damage.

The program's leaders are excited to offer this fast-paced introduction to the sport that has been in this community since at least 1917.

The fifth and sixth graders will serve as an introduction to tackling, as was the case in the 1990's when Bucksport saw its largest youth participation numbers and retention of the athletes through the varsity sports level.

The latest change will coincide with the continued availability of scholarship opportunities, free clinics to allow potential participants a sneak peek at the sport, volunteer education on safe football techniques and other initiatives that will ensure the Bucksport Recreation Department's ability to continue fielding youth football teams well into the future.

Information concerning registration and practice schedules will be available by later this month.

Got questions or concerns? Nick Tymoczko, Bucksport operations director for the Down East Family YMCA, can be contacted at 469-3518.

Out with old; in with new!

The old, long-since-failed asbestos shingles atop historic Wilson Hall are being stripped off so a new watertight roof can be installed.

Now owned by Bucksport businessman Larry Wahl, the entire building will be made watertight and secure from the elements under an agreement with the town.

The long-term re-use of the building is yet to be determined.

— IN THE WORKS . . .

NEVER ON FRIDAYS? — The town manager wants to ask the public about the idea of closing the Town Offices building down every Friday. The public hours would be extended from 7:30 to 5:30 on the other weekdays, giving residents who work out of town more time to transact public business before or after their work day. The municipal employees would gain a four-day work week, she noted in a memo to the Town Council.

Susan M. Lessard said the move would provide more convenient public hours and cut heating-and-cooling costs on the three-day weekends. Lessard, who already works Monday through Thursday with Fridays off, plans a survey on the idea. A council committee will consider the proposal at 6 p.m. tonight (7/11).

IN THE SWIM? — Bucksport officials are continuing to cast about for a long-term solution to the loss of the municipal swimming pool because of the continuing major leaks, and the town manager has offered to gather financial information on possible solutions ranging from working on building a traditional pool to replacing it with an enclosed pool. Susan M. Lessard also is researching estimates on annual pool maintenance. The town councilors appear committed to having a pool in good working order, but they do not have any firm figures on what the various options might cost.

Now, Nick Tymoczko, the Bucksport operations director for the YMCA, has floated the idea of developing a swimming area and recreational complex at Silver Lake. While he suggested in a memo the cost, "I would imagine it might be a relatively low initial investment," there may be another major concern. Can swimming be allowed in the public drinking water supply for much of the town? Town Manager Susan M. Lessard suggested the answer may be a resounding "no." A council committee will consider that at 6:30 p.m. tonight (7/11).

COALITION-BUILDING — The Bucksport Bay Healthy Communities Coalition, which has been struggling without a paid employee, is proposing a new "memorandum of understanding" with the Town of Bucksport. The idea will be considered at a Town Council sub-committee meeting at 6 p.m.

One offense nets second summons

BUCKSPORT — It was a bad night for a 35-year-old Bangor woman who was arrested here early on July 3.

Crystal Delusa reportedly had taken a vehicle in Bangor earlier in the night on July 2 and been issued a summons for that in Bangor.

A few hours later, about 2:30 a.m., she drove the same vehicle into a utility pole on the River Road, near the entrance to Bob's Small Engine shop. Delusa then allegedly fled the scene, leaving the damaged vehicle

Police chief asks to buy used car

BUCKSPORT — Police Chief Sean P. Geagan tonight (7/11) will ask the Town Council to purchase a 2016 Ford Explorer with 23,000 miles on it to replace his car.

He's also seeking a second used vehicle to replace the animal control officer's truck which has 170,000 miles on the odometer.

Geagan said the cost of both vehicles will be kept under $37,000. The money would come from an account set aside to purchase one new cruiser this year.

A cruiser bought new in December of 2013 now has 95,000 miles on it, but will be kept, "due to call volume, court transports and travel" needs. That cruiser will be the trade-in for another new cruiser next year, the chief wrote.

The 2016 model the chief is eyeing for his use is at a South Portland dealership, and is being offered for $26,000.

As for the animal control officer's vehicle, Chief Geagan is considering one of the surplus government vehicles listed in Augusta or a used vehicle from some private source.

- Christopher Barry, 31, of Orrington was cited for reading while driving after he was stopped on Main Street about 1:45 p.m. last Saturday.

- Joshua Moore, 34, of Bucksport was ticketed for driving after a license suspension or revocation and with violating the bail set in an earlier case. He was stopped on U.S. Route 1 about 4:45 p.m. on July 3.
