other requisite for a strictly first-class hotel can be found within the walls of this most modern Inn. The cuisine will be maintained at that same high standard of excellence which was set during its first season, in 1899.

The summer pleasures which it offers are as diversified as at any resort in the world, making each day seem but a fleeting moment, until the time for home going comes all too soon.

A fine bathing beach gives a chance for a morning swim; an excellent golf course, laid out by Professor Fenn, helps to round out the morning’s pleasure, or, if preferred, the finest bass, white perch, trout and salmon fishing to be found in Maine may be enjoyed in the modern cedar boats or canvas canoes, or in the steam or electric launches, always at the disposal of the guests. In Long Lake, on the shore of which is situated the hotel, was taken the largest salmon ever landed on a fly in Maine. It weighed twenty-one and one-half pounds, was mounted, and is now exhibited in the State House at the capital city, Augusta. Tennis, croquet, walking, mountain climbing or driving lend a variety, with music, dancing and indoor amusements for the evening hours. The walks among the pines and birches are clean and delightfully cool, and guests from the hotel find hammocks and rustic seats tucked away in secluded nooks where reading has an added pleasure if one does not feel in the mood for greater exertion.

ABSOlutely pure water is brought from "Skid Hill Spring," located on a high hill two miles from the Inn, on the western shore of the lake. This spring has the curative properties of the justly famous Maine springs, with a flow of 1,000 gallons an hour, bubbling out of pure white sand and having an even temperature of 45° throughout the year.

Laved by the clear waters and fanned by the gentle breezes which come laden with the balmy odors of balsam, pine and cedar, the grounds of the Inn are at all times delightfully cool and refreshing, yet without the clammy dampness of the seashore.

Sport in all its variety, both with rod and gun, is unsurpassed, the excellence and variety of the game yielding good returns to the tourist as well as the sportsman. To the invalid, and to all afflicted with hay fever, the pure, salubrious and invigorating atmosphere renders this place of resort a delightful and health-giving sanitarium.

The drives are particularly attractive, and many spots of rare beauty can be explored either on foot, or with team or bicycle. Across the draw-bridge from the Inn is the tiny, tree-embowered village of Naples. At distances convenient to be reached by steamer or otherwise are the larger villages of Bridgton, Harrison, Waterford, Raymond.

The famous Poland Spring House is but sixteen miles distant, and a trip to Bethel brings one to the gateway of the Rangeley Lake region. Naples is but six hours from Boston and two hours from Portland, has excellent mail...

many respects as remarkable as any in the world. Leaving the Union Station in Portland, over the Mountain Division of the Maine Central Railroad, a half-hour's ride takes one to Sebago Lake Station, where a transfer is made to the steamers of the Sebago Lake, Songo River and Bay of Naples Steamboat Company. The course lies over the beautiful Sebago Lake and up the most winding river in the world, the Songo, made famous by Longfellow and Hawthorne. So tortuous and crooked is this stream that steamers going in opposite directions steam alongside of each other for nearly a mile, separated by only a little strip of land. Following the serpentine windings of this unique stream, the steamer emerges into the Bay of Naples, passing through the Songo lock, the only lock in New England now used by steamers, and lands its passengers directly in front of
