

LOUIS B. GOODALL OF SANFORD.

CERTAIN names are linked with sections, in the history of Maine;
Men who did things; men who dared things, men who bravely stood the strain

Of the fight to blaze the pathway, to a higher livelihood,
And create the growing city, where the lonely forests stood,
They are written in the tributes that their fellow-townsmen pay;
They are large, in public records, in the true historic way,
While as monuments of progress, within walls of brick and stone,
They endow our busy commerce, in a manner all their own.

Take the Goodalls, down in Sanford; it's an ample case in hand;—
With a name for skill and progress that is famous thru the land,
With their mill renowned in business, in a manner well defined
In the fashioning of fabrics, for the dress for humankind.
You do not need this mention or this likeness that we show
To recall the man here pictured, for you, all of you, well know
That he's built up here, among us, such a truly honored name
That it's linked with business progress in the western part of Maine,
In his mills and banks and railroads, till, the people say, who should,
He not only is a Good-all; but he, likewise, is all-good.
