TEMPERS

Temper is queer things anyway. We snap, and growl, and scold, and fume, and fret for no cause under the sun that we know of and when trouble really comes we smile and take it as unconcerned as though it was the most commonplace affair. We will sulk for a week over a slight that was all in our imagination and grow all the madder because we know that the whole matter is an invention of our own. The fact is, when we feel good, a cyclone can't spoil our equanimity, but if we chance to be out of sorts and have the blues, we are going to get mad and stay mad and if we don't find any provocation we will make one. The man who gets the blues—and who is there who doesn't get them—is a most unfortunate person. Ten minutes after the attack begins he has concluded that he is the most abused man in the face of the earth. Every person in the town is working against him—he knows it and it is no use to deny the fact. If the unfortunate man is married, he wrecks disgust upon his wife and boy and cow.

OLD AGE

We wish to say a few words for the old folks, believing that the infirmities of advanced years are often treated with an indifference that is hard to bear. Not by all, of course, for there are many, we will hope the majority, that are thoughtful of the aged and kind to them. Then again, there are others who, to put it mildly, are harsh and cold. It is very natural to smile on what is lovely and strong, and frown on the reverse without even observing that we do so; and it often follows with the young especially, that as they look on the furrowed face, the dim eyes and trembling hands, the tottering, uncertain steps of an old man or woman, they seem to forget that in that warm and honeyed prison house are a heart and soul which yearn for recognition, for kindness in word and deed, and for a little love, with an intensity that youth in its fullness does not know. They must forget, or one would not so often hear such remarks, "Oh grandma, don't bother; grandpa forgets everything; grandpa, what do you want to go for? Old folks ought to be contented at home!"

In our words to others, in all our dealings with them, it is our duty to stop and think; and with the old it is positive cruelty not to do so. It is down hill, remember; a hill with steep stony paths, and at its foot there is only a grave. Don't by impatient words and looks push them along its precipitous ways; don't bruise their weary feet with rocks of ridicule and uncalculated jest; don't glaze that downward slope with the ice of indifference; and above all, don't hang on every bush and boulder placards of their own deterioration. It is not necessary to remind them that they have left their prime and strength behind. They know it; none to well.

THE CALIFORNIA METROPOLIS

Great is Los Angeles. Ranked as our seventeenth city in 1910, the ambitious and hustling metropolis of southern California at one leap goes ahead of San Francisco in population, outgrows New Orleans, Cincinnati, Washington and other sizable cities, and becomes the biggest town in the western half of the United States. In the last ten years Los Angeles has almost doubled in population, gaining 256,000, as compared with San Francisco's increase of 97,000.

Several causes have conspired to bring about this result. The location of the southern city is fortunate both as to climate and with respect to commercial relations with the surrounding country. With the appreciation of advertising values characteristic of the shrewd promoter, the city has taken advantage of every opportunity to enlarge its area. Originally it covered 26 square miles, an area stretching three miles in each direction from the old plaza. Today the area is 351 square miles. With plucky determination the city set out to become a great port, and the addition of the "shoe-string strip" reaching from the town to the ocean and including the ports of San Pedro and Wilmington, afforded the opportunity. The harbor municipally owned and controlled, is guarded by a breakwater constructed by the federal government. Then, also, the city is located on the shortest road by the lowest grades between the two oceans, and the opening of the Panama canal spelled for it an opportunity which California energy could not miss. With four transcontinental railroad systems and an electric system that is a wonder in eastern eyes, covering for more than 1000 miles of track and including some lines with four tracks; with its great business in fruits and its co-operative system of distribution and with its intimate relations with the development of the motion picture industry, this city, which today basks exultantly the result of the census, seems to have had a characteristically American "career." Its population in 1850 was only 1600, and the count of 1880 gave it only 11,000. San Francisco, of course, has suffered since the earthquake by the removal of many thousands to Oakland and other places across the bay; Los Angeles seems destined to play a great part in the development of the far Southwest. It is the conspicuous trophy of the little known campaigns of the Mexican war, coming into the possession of the United States in 1846.

FOR PRESIDENT AND ## VICE-PRESIDENT

The Republican National Convention that chose Warren G. Harding and Calvin Coolidge was, according to certain critics, "leaderless." None may successfully deny, however, that it arose to the full measure of its great responsibility and elected leaders worthy of the great party and the country. The report of the work of that convention has gone forth like a message of assurance that the mighty task of peace reconstruction is this good land of ours is to be placed in the safe and skilled hands of trustworthy managers.

There has been, especially of late, a trend of inquiring thought respecting the man of American tradition—the man who recognized the opportunity, which we pride ourselves everyone in this country is afforded, and having recognized it was grateful rather than critical, was proud to undertake it, to make the most of it, and become so busy in doing the work he had found to do that he had no time for being a poor citizen.

Some have sneered at the tradition; some have said the only opportunity worth while was the amassing of wealth; others that opportunity was a delusion and he who reached for an eager hand to grasp it but thrust into the grip of the shackles of the slave. Prophets full-whiskered and wild-eyed have come forth from the lairs of tyranny to make us "free."

Be it said there have been a goodly number of the people who concluded, if any old prophet might have honor save in his own neighborhood, there was such an achievement possible as making good among one's own folks and with the facilities already possessed. Needless to add that Messrs. Harding and Coolidge were of that number.

Warren G. Harding, son of a country doctor in Ohio, found it necessary for the completing of his education to perform manual and other kinds of labor. He drove team, taught district school and had respect for the dollars he earned. While he may have considered himself a journalist he nevertheless did not hesitate to act as printer's devil. All his life he has been "in touch" with affairs, with news for his paper, with the people he employs, with the business of the bank of which he is a director and with the church of which he is a trustee. Wherever he has associated with men they have found him worthy of the highest confidence, tactful, straightforward, honest. He is not criticised for lavish use of money in his campaign, did not have it to lavish, it is said. Not only has he worked and found wisdom in the affairs intimately touching the concerns of this country, but is recognized as one of the ablest members of the Senate committee on foreign relations, and so is thoroughly equipped for the duties of the position in which, if he lives, we believe he will be placed by the vote of a large majority.

This so-called leaderless convention also selected as its candidate for the vice-presidency, a man of Presidential calibre, a national figure by reason of the superb courage and clear vision with which in a crisis, fundamental in its effect on our institutions, he did his simple, plain duty in the face of powerful opposition and regardless of the consequences to his political future. New England is proud of this selection and the country will be.

With such leaders, so chosen, the Republican party faces the issues of this campaign with the brightest prospects of overwhelming success.

THE GREENE BILL A LAW

At last, the United States has the foundations of an up-to-date national merchant marine policy applicable to shipping overseas. This measure—one of the few important constructive results of the congressional session just ended—may fairly bear the name of Representative William S. Greene of Massachusetts, the chairman of the House committee on merchant marine and fisheries, which took a vigorous initiative in the undertaking. Technically it is the Greene bill, with certain amendments, which the Senate passed with an overwhelming majority and the President has signed.

It is gratifying proof of a thoroughly aroused national interest in ocean trade that this legislation, though opposed by formidable influences, should have been piloted safely through the turbulent last days of the session, when so much other urgent business failed. Senators and representatives put this ship measure steadily ahead because they felt that there was a positive demand for it from the American people, and that it was good politics to place it on the statute books before the opening of the presidential campaign. The new law arms the shipping board with vast authority over our merchant marine and all that pertains to it, and give the board not only power but permanence. It is immediately to be reorganized and increased to seven members, two from the Atlantic and two from the Pacific states, one from the Gulf, one from the Great Lakes and one from the interior. These commissioners are directed to sell the 10,000,000 gross tons of war-built government-owned shipping "as soon as practicable," and are virtually left to dispose of it at any prices they may see fit, competitive public or private sale, after advertisement. But the ships must be sold only to American citizens or corporations except in the case of vessels not needed for our own commerce for which customers cannot be found. Not without the consent of five out of seven members of the board, after searching investigation, can any of these American ships be transferred to foreign registry. This provision undoubtedly reflects the very earnest desire of the country that American interests should be most jealously protected in the American merchant marine.

The law declares unequivocally for private ownership and operation of all ships—both political parties in Congress almost unanimously agreeing on this as the rightful principle. But it may safely be assumed that the process of transfer will be deliberate and careful, and that the government will continue to have a direct, vital interest in American shipping for many years to come. It is to be the national policy to make the fullest possible use of the facilities of all our seaports capable of sustaining lines of ships in overseas commerce. Government construction of merchant tonnage ends with the completion of the few remaining steel cargo steamers for which contracts have been let, but an annual expenditure of $25,000,000 is provided for loans to shipowners who may desire to build large, swift liners for the postal service and the naval reserve. All American vessels engaged in overseas trade to be exempt for ten years from all war profits and excess profits taxation, on condition that the amount of such exemptions be applied with twice the same amount of private capital to launching of new ships from American yards. Moreover, the post office department and the shipping board are authorized to assist with adequate postal compensation the maintenance of superior steam lines wherever they may best serve the welfare of American commerce.

All treaties with other governments that prevent us from returning to the former policy of preferential tonnage dues and customs taxes must be abrogated under the new law, but these preferential dues and taxes are not in form re-established. A novel provision of the law, which with tactful enforcement may prove highly effective is the reservation to American ships of the carrying of all import or export merchandise that may enjoy low preferential freight rates on American railroads. These features of the new law, it is believed, will serve as a complete offset for any advantage which foreign ships may have in their low wages, subsidies or bounties. To facilitate the prompt sale of the government-owned ships on the liberal terms of payment provided, ship mortgages are given priority over other liens, and there is definite encouragement of a national classification and survey system in the American Bureau of Shipping and also of an American system of marine insurance.

All this constitutes a powerful measure of far-reaching legislation. It opens a wide opportunity for maritime New England.

TEMPERATURE OF MAN

LOWEST AT 3:30 A. M.

The normal temperature of man varies according to the hour of the day. It is lowest at about 3:30 a. m., when it averages 97 deg. F.; from then on it gradually rises until it reaches a maximum of 99.2 deg. F. at 3:30 p. m., after which it falls. This is the temperature of the armpit, which is always slightly lower than that inside the body.

Muscular exertion raises the temperature from three to three and a half degrees, but 20 minutes of rest results in a lowering to normal. Eating and fasting have almost no effect on the temperature, nor has age.

The temperature of animals differs little from that of man, though generally slightly higher. That of pigs is 103.41, of sheep 103.2, of dogs 102.5, of horses, 99.8, of rats 101, of wolves 104.9 that of whales 101.8, that of tigers 99.9.

Birds have still higher temperatures sparrows having 107.4; cows, 109; wild ducks, 109.4.

Reptiles are much lower, but vary much with the hour of the day, a live tortoise registering 55.7 at midnight when the air was 55.4 and 65.8 at 1 p. m.; when the air was 68.9.

SHALL THE DEVIL
RULE TANGIER?

The queer colony of about 1200 men and women, descendants from pioneers who date back to the adventurous days of Capt. John Smith of Pocahontas fame, in the 1600s, is disturbed as it never has been before.

Shall the church prevail, as it always has since first the island was settled, nearly 300 years ago, or shall the world, the flesh and the devil begin a belated rule?

This is the question the Tangierites believe they are facing, and it will be determined, they think, over at Accoumac, on the Virginia mainland, when Capt. Charley Connorton, the island's constable and solitary police officer, will be placed on trial for felonious assault.

In Church or Out of Sight
 As most of the country knows by this time, Capt. Charley shot and almost killed Roland Parks, a lad of 17, because Roland was disobeying an island ordinance, which holds that everybody must either be in church while services are being held, or must keep out of sight, neither appearing in the single street which bisects the island, nor on a porch, nor at a window, nor at any other place where one is visible, Roland was on his brother's porch.

If Capt. Charley is convicted, the ancients of the island believe, it will mean that the church is losing its grip, because, they contend, he was merely enforcing a law of man and God. Everybody should be at church or decently hidden, must of the old-timers believe sincerely, when church is in session.

If Capt. Charley is acquitted, on the other hand, the Parks family, who number perhaps one hundred, and some other islanders who sympathize with them, will want to know if constables can continue to go around shooting up folks who are decent, quiet and orderly, even if they are not in church. Has not the time come, they demand, for a little common sense to be mixed up with religion?

Both Sides of the Case

The boy fortunately is out of danger. He is now walking about, although Capt. Charley's bullet went through the lower tip of his lung, passed out of his back and then splintered a clasp-board of his father's home.

Down the street—there is only one and it is only eight feet wide—Capt. Charley, free on $2500 bail, was on his knees whitewashing his picket fence a job which yesterday and today seemed to be epidemic on Tangier Island.

In a nutshell, the contentions of the two are these:
 Roland Parks says: "I wasn't doing anything wrong. I was willing to go along with Capt. Charley if he wanted to arrest me and my father and mother and brothers offered then and there to pay him any fine, but he got excited and shot me."
 Capt. Charley says: "It was my duty, under the ordinance, to arrest anybody who was outside his home during church hours. When I arrested Roland he resisted and I had to shoot him."

The church on Tangier Island is everything. The islanders, who belong to it, and they are said to number about 900 out of the total population, render to it the Biblical tithe of 10 percent on all their incomes, and these are by no means small, for what with the fish and the crabs and the oysters and clams, which everybody catches and sells over at Crisfield, the Tangierites make a very fair living.

Discovered by Capt. John Smith
 Tangier lies 12 miles out in Chesapeake Bay from Crisfield. While Crisfield is in Maryland, Tangier is in Virginia waters.

Capt. John Smith, who first made that name famous by his affair with the lovely Indian maiden, discovered the place in 1607 and wrote about it in his journal.

It was not until 1650 that it became a human habitation. Two fishermen named Elzey and Revel found that the waters abounded in sea food, and they with their families moved over from the mainland, shortly to be followed by others.

The old names still persist, because there has never been much new blood introduced into Tangier. There are still the Crocketts, one of whom is the present Mayor; the Thomases, from which strain came Joshua Thomas, the prophet and the most famous man who ever lived in Tangier; the Tylers, the Evanses and the Parks, of which young Roland the protagonist in the present affair is descended.

Religion Their Whole Life

The islanders are strong, sturdy men and women; most of them are of at least of average intelligence, and many of them above that. The lads are sailormen and fishermen, who rank well with the hardy ones of Gloucester, and the women are cooks and housekeepers extraordinary, as one may attest who has visited their homes.

They have the old-time religion, with a blazing hell and an everlasting damnation, and pleasure, amusement, entertainment has no part in their life at all. They don't believe in that sort of thing. If you want to you may, but not the folk of Tangier.

Old Joshua Thomas, the prophet, appears to have been largely responsible for this. His memory to this day is almost worshipped.

Joshua, the old history tells one, was born in Virginia in 1776, of a soldier and a schoolteacher mother, and emigrated early after his religious training to Tangier.

Not Fair to Gaze Upon

Despite the nearness to Crisfield, a branch terminus of the New York, Philadelphia & Norfolk Railroad, Tangier is a difficult place to get at. When fair weather prevails a mail boat runs over every day or so, but when the bay kicks up there is no transportation to be had.

It is not fair to gaze upon, approaching from the stretch of bay. The first thing that greets the eye are huge mountains of oyster shells along the shore. The island is low, and a good part of its three miles of length and three-quarter mile of width is made up of swamp. But the church, freshly painted, soon looms up like a beacon. It is always being painted.

The church is close to the rickety old wooden landing stage. Passing beyond it one comes at once to the street without a name. This is literally just eight feet wide. And why should it be wider, the Tangierites would like to know?

There is not an automobile, naturally, on Tangier. There is not even a horse. There isn't a wagon.

And so there is just room enough in the street, which is a streak of mud in Spring and a streak of dust in Summer, for folks to comfortably pass. Throughout its length it is lined by the old-fashioned type of wooden picket fences. These are kept whitewashed. Shade trees, mostly maples, droop their boughs over these fences and sometimes make an arch across the little highway. In Summer this must be delightful.

Children Don't Know How to Play
 To the visitors observing Tangier for the first time, there seems something strange about the children. Then he realizes that the strange thing is that they are not play.

"Oh yes, they play," said a shopkeeper to one who inquired about this, "but they generally play church."

There is no baseball club on the island. There not a baseball diamond, however rude. One doubts if there is a baseball, even, or a bat. None was in evidence.

There are no movies, of course.

Their views of entertainment may be guessed by this incident. A few evenings ago a Crisfield church had a musicale for some charity or other. A noted Philadelphia organist came down to play, and a young woman choir singer rendered some operatic selections. A man and his wife from Tangier were induced to attend.

"I can't stay here where that outrageous woman is," explained the wife shortly after the concert began.

When asked why, she said, "Why she hasn't any clothes on to speak of. She might as well be up there naked." The girl was wearing a very moderately cut evening gown.

"How did you like it," the Tangier husband was asked. "Well I'd rather hear the old songs of Zion any day," he said, "and when I saw that girl I had to go hide behind the organ."

No Curtains Drawn

There are parlor organs in most of the frame homes of Tangier Island, but the only other musical instrument they say is a phonograph which is in Walters' ice cream parlor, down near the dock. This is supposed by the Elders to be a gay place, for it has worldly music and the young folks sometimes smile when they eat ice cream or drink pop of an early evening down at Walters.

Naturally there are no cabarets and there isn't any liquor, even of the corn variety, at present, although they do say there are those who occasionally reach a hooker when they can achieve one. A Japanese ship, and it had a considerably quantity of hooch aboard. The gossips say there was a fairish bit of secret back-sliding done at that time.

Walking down the street of an evening, one is surprised to find that all the parlors are illuminated. There are no drawn curtains in the homes of the righteous.

It is a rule of the church that there shall be nothing secret from neighbors' eyes. But the town is dark and asleep at 8.30 or 9, save on Saturday evenings when the boys and girls stroll hand-in-hand a little later.

Cards Unknown

The islanders, in the main, do not know what playing cards are, nor dice, nor craps. Curiously, there are no negroes in the colony, either. Tangier has a color line, and the negroes do not even visit it.

There is a quaint dialect, or at least a quaint accentuation, in vogue here. It is a combination of the soft, slurring semi-negroid speech of the South with the high, nasal twang of the mountaineer breed.

In either the front yard, facing the street, or the back yard of almost every house on Tangier Island is the family burying ground.

From the bay good-sized canals have been cut through the swampy edges of the island at regular intervals, and from these canals still smaller inlets, ranging down to about 10 feet in width have been run right up to the back yards of most of the residences.

Thus a man or woman going shopping frequently paddles right from the back door in a skiff and shoves up to the back door of the store.

Amazed at Publicity

They are a serious folk, these of Tangier Island, and yet quietly courteous and cordial. Since the shooting of young Roland Parks there have been rather more visitors than usual. The influx of newspaper writers has surprised the natives and in some cases offended them.

Twenty-five Tangier lads fought for their country and one of them rests in France.
 Curiously, in view of the general situation in Tangier, the minister is the man who seems most strongly in favor of some sort of recreation. He is Rev. W. F. Goodwin, who was preaching his first sermon the day young Parks was shot by Capt. Charley. Mr. Goodwin had just arrived from Disberville, Md.

"It was very regrettable," he said, "and I am glad the boy is recovering. Personally, I do not think he was doing any harm. I think the young people should have some innocent recreation. I understand one of my predecessors tried to have a bowling alley established for the men, but he failed in his efforts."

It has been told here that there isn't an automobile or a horse on Tangier. For that matter, the only useful animals recorded as living on the island are two cows. Their owners get 25 cents a quart for milk. Most children are raised on the condensed article.

Looked at from any angle, Tangier is as queer a place as may be found in America. It seems always to bear in mind that epitaph which old Joshua Thomas the Prophet caused to be placed on his tomb:
 Come all my friends as you pass by, Behold the place where I do lie, As you are now, so once was I, Remember you were born to die.

Yet with this sentiment and with a sincere religious feeling predominant the fisherfolk used to wage bitter feuds with those of Smith's Island a short distance off and several men on both sides were shot to death. They are odd, but they are earnest. They are living the way the majority of them want to live, and they cannot see where it is anybody's business how they live. Perhaps it isn't.

MAINE WOMAN HAS GAINED 29 POUNDS

When She Began Taking Tanlac Was Almost a Nervous Wreck—In Perfect Health Now

"When I began taking Tanlac three months ago I was a nervous wreck and weighed only 104 pounds, but I now weigh 133 pounds and have never felt better in my life, was the remarkable statement made by Mrs. Bethel R. Leonard, 3 Wilnot street, Portland, Maine, while discussing the merits of the medicine a few evenings ago.

"Could sit here all night," she added, "and talk about the good Tanlac has done me and then not tell it all. Five years ago I commenced suffering from what was called a complication of troubles, but as no one seemed to understand my case or know what to do for me, I kept going down hill. I spent some time in a hospital, was under special treatment for two years and did everything possible, but I kept getting worse. My nerves troubled me more than anything else, and it was almost impossible for me to get any sleep at all, for I would just roll and toss from one side of the bed to the other all night long and if I did happen to drop off to sleep I would wake up with a start almost frightened to death. Why, even the ringing of the front door bell so completely upset me I had to have it taken off, and there were days when the talking and noise around the house would almost drive me distracted. My appetite was extremely poor, and I did not eat enough to feed a baby—a slice of toast and cup of tea being a hearty meal for me at any time. It had been five years since I have been able to do my housework, for it was all I could do to even walk across the floor or stand on my feet. I had terrible pains all over my body all the time and sometimes these pains were so bad it seemed like every bone in my body was splitting in two, and my head would ache so I thought lost of times it would burst open.

"I decided to try Tanlac after seeing where it was benefitting so many other people, and to my joy I began to improve on the very first bottle. I have taken six bottles in all and the benefits I have received are more than remarkable. My nerves are in such perfect condition I can hardly believe I am the same person. Why, just the other night I chaperoned 200 school children and the noise made by them never disturbed me in the least. I have had the front door bell put back and you could ring it off without its upsetting me, and sleep? Why I can sleep the whole night through without ever waking up and some one has to call me every morning. The pains have all gone out of my body, I don't know what it is to have a headache and my appetite is so good I eat enough for two people and still I am hungry all the time. Tanlac has proven a wonderful blessing to me.

CLASS OF H. H. S. '20 THE LARGEST IN HISTORY

The splendid exercises of the H. H. S. graduating class took place Friday forenoon at the Temple Theatre and every seat in the large auditorium was filled while many were obliged to stand.

The class of 1920 was so large and so large a number of friends wished to attend the exercises that the school auditorium was inadequate to care for them so the Temple Theatre through the courtesy of Mgr. Churchill was made available for the event.

Bryson's orchestra furnished music while the large crowd was being seated, promptly at 10.15 o'clock the class marshalled by Lloyd Berrie marched to the seats reserved for them, which was followed by a program by Rev. E. C. Jenkins.

Upon the stage were seated members of the school board the entire teaching staff of the H. H. S. and those of the class who were to take part in the exercises.

The honor parts on the program the Salutatory and the Valedictory by Misses Dorothy Helen Hatfield and Beatrice Howie Currie were given in an easy pleasing manner. Miss Hatfield after extending a few words of welcome to the school board, the faculty and to the citizens of the town, had for her address "Maine the Vacation Land of the East." Miss Currie paid a high tribute to the school officials and to the many warm friendships made during the school days.

Each number of the program was handed very nicely but the interest seemed to centre on the presentation of gifts and the class prophecy, numbers that are pleasing alike to the class and the spectators.

The presentation of gifts was made by Virginia Frances McLoon and Lewis John Iott and created much merriment as the various gifts seemed in most cases aptly appropriate. The gifts came from an old treasure chest buried by Capt. Kidd and found many years hence by "Jack" Iott who utilized the contents as the gifts for the 1920 Class.

The class prophecy was in the nature of postal card shower which arrived in the nick of time by the airplane mail, and as the tiny flyer swooped down from the sky, to the stage high over the heads of the spectators carrying its load of mail its appearance was greeted with applause, the postals were addressed to Anna Lois Hovey and Josephine Avory Munro, and were from each member of the class of 1920 and were purported to be in celebration of the 15th anniversary of its graduation and as each postal was read it showed that the predictions made for the members of the class had in many cases come true.

Musical selections by members of the class and a quartet by the young ladies of the Junior class added much to the enjoyment of the program.

From start to finish the exercises went along without a hitch, one of the pleasing features of the program was the presentation to the school from the class a life sized picture of Abraham Lincoln, the presentation speech being made by Lewis J. Iott to which Principal Perkins responded briefly.

Bernard Archibald chairman of the school board presented the diplomas. In a short speech he told the members of the class that "the object of education was complete living, and having received from the hands of the community in which they lived, without distinction of religion creed or color, the opportunity to make themselves successful through the education received here." He reminded the class that they in turn should give freely of their talents to the community in which they lived for all that was good and useful.

URGES TRUTHFULNESS IN ALL ADVERTISING

"We should strive to make America known as a safe place in which to shop," declared Richard H. Lee of New York special counsel of the Advertising Clubs, in discussing What Shall America do to Hold Her World Trade, at the 16th annual convention of the association.

"We should meet foreign conditions as far as possible. We should impose no unnecessary change in their present method of conducting their business. Above all we should strive to be truthful in our description of the product so that there may be no disappointment upon its arrival.

Through the medium of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the world foreign nations have come to know America as the land of truth-in-advertising. Very shortly better business bureaus will be established in South America, Australia and Great Britain. Through these bureaus we may keep an accurate check on the conduct of American merchants and when that conduct is not in keeping with the work which American business is supporting in this Country, we shall bring the matter to the attention of the American public that they may mark the man who, through his misconduct, is destroying the good name of America and the opportunity of our merchants in the foreign field."

Mr. Lee described specific instances in which misleading or fraudulent advertising had been stopped overseas.

Dealing with advertising from a woman's point of view, Mrs. Christine Frederick of New York City suggested a campaign to advertise advertising to the consumers and she quoted statistics to show that most of these consumers are women.

Mrs. Frederick suggested the preparation of an unacademic booklet informing the consumer of the economic advantages of the advertised product, with charts showing that advertising reduces living costs and lectures to create good will for advertising on the part of the public.

"There is need of a woman's viewpoint in the actual handling of advertising copy of many products used in the home," continued Mrs. Frederick. "The plain woman consumer wants real facts and common sense and you must not antagonize her psychology. Do not show me pictures of women painting pantry shelves attired in evening gowns or using a washing machine in a reception dress. You have the wrong feminine psychology when you show a picture of the goods being used by a prettier woman than I am. Like the cats we are, we say to ourselves that if this impossible French doll were to tuck up her clothes and actually use the device upon which she is leaning, she would lose her frozen smile. You advertisers have gone mad on the pretty girl model, the artificial, mannered mannikin. I make a plea for the genuine homely human model, who looks more like the woman who really buys your goods."

DOMENJOZ HERE

JULY 5 AND 6

Domenjoz is only a young man, but does feats never before conceived. Thousands of spectators with hearts in mouths have stood almost breathless as the daring aviator has gone speeding over their heads at a terrific rate, head down. Suddenly, as they stood in awe, they have heard the engines stop their chugging and have seen the machine drop like a shot before their eyes for a distance of 1000 feet. Up in the air, every fibre of young Domenjoz' body was stiffened, taut to the monoplane as he grasped the levers that controlled the blades.

Slowly, but surely, the planes obeyed the levers within 200 feet of the ground. The machine righted the engines again sent out their glad chug, chug, and gracefully the birdman in his sky yacht glided down, accomplishing man's greatest feat, flying upside down, something that not even birds can do.

He gives an exhibition of marvelous daring and skill, a demonstration of stable control of a flying machine never before seen in this country precarious and hazardous, it is proclaimed by experts to be a scientific performance, absolutely devoid of recklessness. The young aviator defies gravity.

Domenjoz is the only aviator that loops the loop in a monoplane, turning a complete somersault. He stands his aeroplane upon its head. He cuts a dollar mark in the sky. He stands the huge hundred horse power monoplane upon its "tail", and then stopping the engine three thousand feet in the air, slowly, like a balancing diver, turns a complete back somersault, while falling with the 725 pound machine at the rate of 125 miles an hour.

Domenjoz twists the big contrivance upon its back and glides upside down. He rises to a great height, and then falls, with the machine rolling over and over on a horizontal keel, like a victim of the hunter's gun.

He does everything that the bird can do, and many things that birds never will be able to do.

TRESPASS ON HIGHWAYS

The State Highway Commission has received several complaints to the effect that abutters along the State highways have been plowing and harrowing into the gutter of the road and interfering with the drainage. The commission has recently sent out to supervisors copies of the statute prohibiting such work and reports are being received to the effect that where the supervisors have taken up this matter with parties who have been infringing the law, they have been willing to clear out the obstructions and in nearly every case have promised to see that gutters are not interfered with past their property.

The statute covering is Section 81 of Chapter 24 and reads as follows: "No person, by himself, his agents or servants, other than a person having a legal supervision of a public way shall cultivate, in connection with the improvements of lands adjacent thereto, any portion of the wrought part of any public way, in such manner as to change the drainage thereof or obstruct said way; nor shall any person, by himself, his agents or servants, other than a person having legal supervision of a public way, deposit within or along any ditch or drain in a public way any material that shall obstruct the flow of water in such ditch or drain or otherwise obstruct said way; provided, however, that with the written consent and in accordance with specifications of the legal authorities having supervision of such ditch or drain, any person may provide egress and regress to and from lands occupied by him, lawfully construct and maintain a bridge across such ditch or drain."

The entire program of the day is to be under the direct supervision of Prof. Wm. R. Chapman, founder and organizer of the Maine Music Festival. Prof. Chapman has had complete charge of inviting and entertaining the distinguished guests of the occasion.

GET YOUR OWN GOAT AND BE INDEPENDENT OF THE MILKMAN

Nanny will yet butt her way into popular favor, thinks a sanguine friend of hers. To be sure, there is the old family scandal that the goat was created by the devil, which probably arose because of the animal's pernicious activities and its fondness for food not relished by the rest of creation. Whatever be the cause, the goat has been selected as the scapegoat to bear the sins and the derisive jokes of many of its fellow creatures. All this is not as it should be, says Farm and Home (London), especially in these days when the high cost of everything under the sun. A goat, will furnish healthy competition for the monopolizing milkman and his cow, as we are told:

At last the hitherto unsuspected value of the goat is being recognized as a more satisfactory and profitable milk-producer than a cow. Instead of having our cows tested for tuberculosis or worrying ourselves to death for fear our dairyman, despite his solemn oath, has not made the tests he should have made, why not obtain our milk from the animal that could not have tuberculosis if it tried. The goat is the only dairy animal immune to tuberculosis. The virtues of goat milk and the ease of obtaining it are too little known.

Anybody can keep a goat, and everybody ought to. From a hygienic point of view the owners of these hardy little creatures may enjoy greater advantages than does the possessor of a pampered, pedigreed cow of the most fashionable breed. It is well known that goat's milk is richer, more nutritious and more easily digested than cow's milk, and as a diet for children and invalids it is stated by the most eminent physicians to be unsurpassed. A good goat will yield from one to two quarts of milk daily.

I find the worst thing against the milchgoat is her name. When I commenced to talk about getting a goat for milk my wife said that if I brought a goat around the house I would have to do the milking and use the milk myself. Now all that has changed. I have a goat which gives us enough milk for table use. We have a family of six children, ranging from six to fifteen years, and would not go back to cow's milk unless we were obliged to.

I. W. W. EASILY WON

LUMBERJACKS

Red radicalism and other anti-social cults spread freely before their potential adherents a hot and inviting meal of untruth. That is why they are successful in gaining recruits among workingmen, that and the fact that employers and others do not set before workers the truth and the fact that the hot inviting meal is really poison. This, in effect, is the experience of Sherman Rogers, who has been "chokerman" and "bull bucker" in the logging camps of the Northwest and who also knows what it means to be in business for himself.

Mr. Rogers relates in the Outlook in interesting fashion how, though the northwestern lumberjacks in 1917 were quite contented, the I. W. W. leaders of Chicago sent men from the Cowlitz river to the Canadian line in the Puget sound district and the entire Panhandle region of northern Idaho. Their specious arguments were magnetic to the lumberjacks because this was the first time an effort had been made to educate them. They were readily convinced that their employers were making out of the men's labor a net profit of 10 times the daily wage. They all believed they were being robbed right and left. The agitation was carried on secretly, thus adding to its appeal.

"Bunk houses," Mr. Rogers writes, "were literally filled with I. W. W. literature, yet none was in sight. Mattresses and pillows were jammed full of it. The talking was done in an undertone in the bunk houses after the evening meal, and in the woods whenever a few of the lumberjacks would get together."

The swift effect of this insidious campaign was seen by the writer. In less than a month's time, he recounts, Washington's happy and contented lumberjacks were turned into an army of unrest and they went out on strike, believing that the operators were making profits of from $50 to $80 a day out of each man.

"If the employers had told the men the truth, the men would have known that the agitators lied," Mr. Rogers contends, "and there would have been no strike."

In support of this contention, he cites the experience of a big steel company in Cleveland, which put all its cards on the table in its relations with its workmen. It told them the plain truth concerning the financial part of the business. They were met weekly by officials of the company and asked to air freely their grievances. If these were real, they were corrected; if fancied, the condition was thoroughly explained. During the general steel strike the cleverest agitators of the I. W. W., the W. I. U., the Russian Federation and the other direct action groups were sent there. The propagandists could make no headway. The employees, being thoroughly familiar with their employers' business, knew the agitators were lying when they told them the employers were industrial thieves and making excessive profits. Though the most seductive methods were employed, not a man from this company's plants joined the strikers, because they knew they were getting a square deal.

Mr. Rogers maintains that "a propaganda of truth" is needed now as never before in the United States, because of the highly organized efforts of the falsifiers.

JAPAN DEPENDENT ON TRADE WITH U. S.

"There has been too much talk of strained relations between Japan and the United States," says the Herald of Asia. "This sort of clap-trap does not come from people of sanity in either country, but from the designing and the foolish, who either desire war for the sake of profit or fail to understand international obligations. A war between the two great and long friendly neighbors on the Pacific would be a crime against humanity, a crime of the blackest dye, and only the most utter neglect of right could permit it. It takes two to make a quarrel. As regards America, there is no disposition on the part of Japan to be a party to disruption of cordial intercourse. Before engaging in war with America Japan would have to divest herself of the strongest sentiment of friendship which she entertains toward any foreign country. If the Japanese had any feeling of incurable animosity toward the United States or cherished a desire to make war with that country, there would have been some evidence of it years ago when the Philippines appealed to Japan to assist them in resisting American conquest of their island. Japan did then what she expects America to do now when the Chinese try to stir up anti-Japanese sentiment in the United States: she said 'No.'"

"A war between Japan and America would be a crime against the people of Japan, even for financial reasons, if for no other. Japan cannot afford war except to preserve her national existence. To her, death is preferable to dishonor; but only the possibility of irretrievable dishonor could drive Japan to expose her people to destruction. Although we have gained much wealth during the war in Europe, we have none to throw away in war. In any case, most of our gold holdings are in America and England, so they have the advantage of us there. Our national debt still exceeds $1,250,000,000, and our rate of taxation is very high, so high as to prove a heavy burden to our people; which, taken with the high cost of living, exposes us to distress among the masses. War sometimes improves social conditions for a time, by increasing the circulation of money through war expenditure; but this condition already exists in Japan as a result of the war in Europe; the inflation of currency is beyond all bounds, and a reaction is bound to come against the already enormous increase in the cost of living. Japan, like all wise nations, must know that the further she can keep her people from war the better for the country.

"As for the greater part of our foreign trade in the Occident is with America, any trouble with that country would prove a severe shock to commercial progress. America takes most of our tea and silk from which we derive a large portion of our income. Our total trade with United States is now over $272,500,000 a year, of which at least $175,000,000 represents exports. This is equal to about one-third of Japan's total annual budget. The disparity in our navies, as well as in our finances, would naturally discourage further the folly of a war with America. Japan is anxious only to have a navy capable of sharing with England and America in the proper patrolling of her portion of the Pacific and not with a view to war. A further discouragement to war is inadequacy of food supplies. Having seen how Germany suffered in this way during the late war in Europe, Japan does not desire to invite a similar fate. The awakening of China, with her opposition to Japan and the rate of disorder in Siberia would all greatly militate against Japan in case of disruption with America. It would prove an almost impossible task for Japan to protect her interests in China Manchuria and Korea and carry on a protective as well as an aggressive war in Japan proper at the same time. In case of trouble both Korea and China would likely be very difficult to handle. Is any further argument needed to prove the undesirability of friction with the United States?"

CROCODILES GUARD

ANNAM TREASURY

A Frenchman returned with an account of a singular national treasury in Annam, writes an eastern correspondent. If the story is true—and it presents no essential improbability—the treasury is in no danger of robbery and is destined to become famous.

Now in Annam iron safes of good resisting power are for the most part unknown, and, unfortunately, adroit thieves are not. To defend his most costly treasures the native ruler had to resort to some means in harmony with the natural circumstances of the country.

Armed guards he could not fully trust. Animals do not steal money, and nature had supplied the ruler with a creature that could not be wheeled nor killed except with a great deal of trouble. The crocodile is such an animal. The ruler would have the crocodile guard his specie reserve.

Yet to avail himself of the services of the crocodile he must keep his money in a place where crocodiles are at home. Nothing was more simple. In the interior of his palace the ruler caused to be constructed a large tank or basin, which he kept filled with water. Then he took several teak logs, which he had holed with holes, and into these holes he put his specie reserve of gold and silver. The holes were closed up and the logs put into the tank.

Then some crocodiles of the largest and fiercest description were installed in the tank and maintained there—not being fed, however, with such a superfluity as to interfere with their natural ferocity. Any person who should undertake to reach the treasure laden logs would surely be eaten by the crocodiles. And anyone who should undertake to put the saurians out of the way would have to make noise enough to attract the attention of the human guards and of the ruler himself, for he, by Annam custom, is required to remain very closely in his palace.

At any rate the royal crocodile treasury has never been robbed and it cannot burn.

GERMAN WARSHIPS

COMING TO CAPITAL

Three German destroyers awarded to this country have sailed from Rosyth, Scotland, for Brest, Secretary Daniels announced. A dispatch to the navy department stated that the U. S. S. Hancock had sailed from Rosyth with the destroyers in tow.

The battleship Ostrifriedland and the cruiser Frankfort are still at Rosyth, but they are soon to proceed to Brest and the entire flotilla is expected to sail for the United States about the 15th of July.

"It has not been definitely decided," said the announcement from the navy department. "On the arrival here the three destroyers will be thoroughly inspected and studied by naval experts from the various bureaus and arrangements will be made for the public to have an opportunity to visit them."

"Handsome is as Handsome Does"

An old adage as true today as in all the yesterdays.

No car offers cleaner lines, more truly dignified gracefulness or deeper lustre of finish than does the Cleveland Six. But these qualities would be but a surface, were it not for what is beneath them.

The exclusive Cleveland motor, the most highly developed of the powerful over-head type, gives a character of performance in flexibility of power and speed, and in dependability and endurance, that surpasses other light cars.

The sturdiness of its chassis construction, the ease of its control, the soft cushioning of its low underslung spring construction, the certainty of its brakes,—all these qualities add to the comfort and safety of its performance on any kind of roadway, on the steepest hills and in crowded traffic.

FEW SAND GLASSES

KEPT CORRECT TIME

Housewives in these days very commonly use sand glasses of the familiar hour-glass pattern for timing boiled eggs. They are employed for the same purposes in many restaurant and hotel kitchens.

The contrivance is, of course, quite ancient, dating back to the middle ages. In much later times, and not so very long ago, it was utilized for timing prayers and sermons. Even nowadays there is an occasional old-fashioned church that keeps a "prayer-glass" on the pulpit.

As one might imagine, such glasses were not beyond criticism in point of accuracy. Four of them were carefully tested recently by the writer. One supposed to mark an even hour, took sixty-seven minutes to run out—a serious error for the congregation if the sermon was dry. Another, for three-quarters of an hour, registered only forty-two minutes. The remaining two were, respectively, undertimed and overtimed two minutes.

The sand glass in European countries replaced the yet more antiquated "time candle," which was marked off in sections of an hour. As a time-keeper, the candle is exceedingly ancient; it was so employed in Rome before Christ was born and very likely by the Egyptians and Babylonians in much earlier days. Counting by length of candles was an old fashioned custom in England.

An equivalent method of time-keeping is even now practiced by the Chinese, who employ, instead of a candle, a length of "joss-stick"—the same thing American small boys use as "punk" for setting off firecrackers. It is made of sawdust, mixed with a little glue and rolled into cylinders of a measured diameter. Such a stick two feet long and marked for the hours lasts half a day, being consumed slowly without flame.

Messengers in China, having but short periods to sleep make sure of waking by placing a lighted piece of joss-stick between their toes. This acts most effectively at the proper moment. Doubtless it was the first and original alarm clock.

When a girl turns down the light it's a pretty good sign that the young man who is courting her isn't going to be.

WORLD'S LARGEST GEM FOUND IN NEVADA

What is believed to be the largest uncut gem in the world has come to light in a recently opened mining district in Nevada, where it was discovered in the spring of 1917. The stone is a "black opal," so called because dark tones predominate in it. It shows mostly dark peacock blues and emerald greens, with a considerable amount of red and several less prominent shades.

In size this great gem approaches a quarter of an ordinary brick, being three and fifteen-sixteenths inches in length, three and one-eighth in width, and two and one-eighth thick at the bulkiest point. Its weight is eighteen and six-tenths avoirdupois ounces, which expressed in gem diction is 8136 grains, or 2566.56 carats. More than a pound of opal is surely some stone! And it is all solid, uncracked, flawless gem material free from matrix or adhering rock except for a paper thin skin encrusting the two major surfaces. Little specks broken from this skin here and there reveal the brilliant play of colors within, while the exposed ends and edge exhibit the full refracting radiance of the mass. This stone is about half again as large as the largest of the noted gems of the world. The Cullinan diamond was roughly the size and shape of a small fist, and, if it had been on opal, this basis since the specific gravity of the diamond is 75 per cent. greater than that of the opal.

FARM THRIVES IN DEATH VALLEY

Death Valley—the most horrible desert on the face of the earth, source of weird mysteries and innumerable tragedies—has yielded to the hand of man to make a garden therein.

Furnace Creek ranch, as the Death Valley farm is known, enjoys many distinctions. Its 65 acres of cultivated land constitutes the most isolated farm in the world, producing food in the midst of a desert inferno, where temperature and atmospheric pressure are almost beyond the limits of plant and animal endurance.

Obviously, the introduction of an abundant water supply was the prime requisite to make the ranch possible. This is obtained from two large springs far back in the Funeral mountains, which pour their streams upon the burned-out Death Valley soil through two great aqueducts, one of steel and one of masonry.

White men cannot live long in the withering heat. Consequently all the work about the ranch is done by Indians of the Piute and Shoshone tribes under the direction of an educated foreman. The average life of a white man in Death Valley is very short. Three white foremen employed on the ranch lasted two summers each, and perished during the third.

Two others went insane, and attempted to flee out of the valley on foot. Neither of them lived to get out of the maze of Funeral mountain canyons. The present foreman has survived seven summers and is soon entering upon his eighth. He attributes his ability to resist the heat to his superb constitution temperate habits and hygienic living. He has obtained a large fan driven by water power. During the hottest days of the summer he makes his bed in front of the fan after sprinkling the floor and wetting his blankets. For all work is then done at night, when the temperature over the valley floor descends to about 120 degrees.

In addition to being a sort of miracle farm, Furnace Creek ranch is also a traveler's relief station, serving the barren blazen wastes of Death Valley and the Funeral mountains country much the same as St. Bernard hospice does the high Alps of Switzerland. Its very existence has saved the life of many lost traveler or prospector who staggered within its boundaries with parched throat and speechless, swollen tongue. Assistance under such circumstances is never refused. If the victim of the desert has money with which to pay for his rescue, well and good, if not, he receives it gratis. On a hill just back of the ranch are a number of mounds—the graves of thirst-tortured souls who tottered into the ranch too late to be saved by water.

HINTS ON SUMMER DRIVING

Regardless of instructions and suggestions regarding safe driving, every year sees its toll in dead and injured because drivers forget rules, or through ignorance, or just plain inability. The rules of the road are simple enough to follow, but some drivers insist upon making their own rules and avoiding all those made for the safety of all the users of the road. One of the common causes of accidents is due to neglect to follow the rule relating to crossings. All crossings ought to be considered potential danger points. If you cannot see or if you do not get a horn signal from a car likely to cross your path don't take it for granted no car is there. Look out for every one else and you will be looking out for yourself.

On a wet road, skidding is the most dangerous thing likely to happen, but skidding becomes dangerous only if the car is traveling at speed. A slow car can easily be stopped, or even if it does not stop when the brakes are applied, at least the impact does little if any harm. Without tire chains, brakes equally adjusted or other assurance that the car will stay straight on a wet road, don't take the chance. Regardless of safety devices, drive slowly, apply the brakes intermittently not harshly. If you know the car is a chronic "skidder," reduce the magnitude as much as possible by shifting into second. If there isn't time to shift into second or if you lose your head, you are at fault. Learn to control a car that is skidding. The rule is steer with the skid, so as to attempt to straighten out the car. The average driver forgets about everything and presses as hard as he can on the clutch and brake pedals. Use the brakes alone and look ahead with a view to keeping the car from striking an object.

The writer has seen any number of cars on the road in rainy weather and no protection whatever afforded the driver against accidents due to impaired vision. Rain on the windshield is no excuse. The shield should be kept clear. The fact that the side curtains are up and you cannot see well to the rear or to either side, doesn't bring a life back. Slow down in the rain and if you cannot see on all sides, wait until the rain is over or drive with extreme caution.

In going down steep grades, use the engine as a brake by shifting into second or first speed. Shut off the ignition if you wish to get still better results; you can switch it on again when you get near the bottom of the grade. This saves the brakes and makes it easy to control the car on the hill. Drive slowly up grades. Don't try to make every hill in high as fast as the car can travel. Remember there are other users of the road.

At night, think of the brightness of the head lamps. Do not confuse an oncoming driver with bright lights. Pass him with dimmers on. Keep as far to the right as you can and drive slowly so as to avoid frightening the other driver. Your statement that he shouldn't get frightened because you weren't too close to him, doesn't repair bones or save lives.

CONVENTION OF 60 YEARS AGO REVIEWED

Lincoln Was Placed in Nomination in 26 Words—Hotel Rates $1.50 to $2.50 a Day

At the first republican national convention held in Chicago 60 years ago. An Iowa delegate walked 150 miles to get to a railroad to come to the convention.

Special railroad rates were made and Chicago's population probably doubled in convention week.

Hotel rooms were $1.50 to $2.50 a day.

Crowds were so great that billiard tables in the hotels were pressed into service as beds.

The Wigwam in which the convention was held, was probably about the size of the annex to the Coliseum, in which this year's convention takes place.

When a special train pulled in with the Massachusetts and other New England delegates rockets were sent up and a cannon boomed to announce their arrival to waiting friends.

The gallery in the convention hall was reserved for women and their escorts. Because of the great number of men unable to get in one man was reported trying to get into the gallery as an Indian squaw selling moccasins as his credentials, but was evicted on the ground that she was no lady.

The two chief nominating speeches were made in less than thirty words. Abraham Lincoln was placed in nomination in twenty-six words.

The making of the Presidential nomination was announced to the city by the firing of a cannon placed on the roof of the convention hall.

That night cannon and rockets were fired, bonfires lighted and large parades formed, the participants carrying anything that would serve—even rakes and fishing poles.

SOCIAL REFORM

CARRANZA'S AIM

Venustiano Carranza was elected President of Mexico March 11, 1917, by the largest vote ever cast in a presidential election in his country.

He was born of parents of comfortable circumstances in Cuatro Ciénegas state of Coahuila, Dec. 29, 1859. He was educated in the public schools of his native state and later studied law at the Mexican capital.

Admitted to the bar, eye trouble prevented him from practicing, and he returned to his native state to become a rancher. His experience as a cattleman, then as judge, senator and finally Governor of Coahuila, made him familiar with the agrarian problem, the root of political unrest in Mexico.

Carranza stepped from political obscurity to international prominence on the graves of the hopes of Gen. Victoriano Huerta, the usurper, and his followers.

With the assassination of President Madero, the news went out to the world that Gen. Carranza elected Governor of the state of Coahuila in 1911 refused to recognize the usurper and would resist him by force of arms.

Carranza is quoted as saying: "Madero's revolution was political; mine is a social one."

Defying Huerta, Carranza rallied a band of 600 followers, which grew into a considerable army when he won the support of Francisco Villa.

His influence spread rapidly, the military victories of Villa, his chief aide, rallying the various factions of northern Mexico around his banner. Huerta's scheming had embroiled Mexico with the United States and intervention seemed imminent. The killing of W. S. Benton, a British subject, by one of Villa's staff officers further complicated the situation.

Villa's victory at Torreón was the first real success of the war. Carranza was pressing Huerta when the conference to discuss the difference between the United States and Huerta was called in Buffalo.

Gen. Carranza refused to suspend hostilities and to abide by the result of the diplomatic negotiations and the fighting went on, with the result that Gen. Huerta resigned the provisional presidency July 15, 1914.

A month later Gen. Carranza made his triumphal entry into Mexico City. Huerta having fled to Spain. Dissension between Villa and Carranza began at the Torreón conference, reaching a climax Sept. 23, 1914, when Villa declared war on Carranza. Gen. Alvaro Obregón became Carranza's leading general.

In November, 1914, the Villa general met at Aguascalientes and formed a Conventionist government in alliance with the Zapata faction. The capital changed hands several times, and was not finally taken by Gen. Obregón until the summer of 1915.

Heavy defeats of Villa by Gen. Alvaro Obregón marked the beginning of the end of the Villa-Zapata party as a military power, and Villa was forced to give up Torreón and concentrate his dwindling forces in northern Chihuahua and eastern Sonora making occasional raids which ended in the attack on Columbus, N. M., which resulted in the invasion of Mexican territory by Gen. Pershing.

Carranza was officially recognized as the head of the de facto government by the United States in October, 1915.

In the diplomatic exchanges that followed between President Wilson and Carranza, the latter insisted in the respect by the United States of Mexico's sovereignty and the concession to his government of reciprocal rights of invasion.

Carranza maintained his position in spite of the crisis caused by serious clashes between Mexico and the American soldiers at Parral and Carrizal.

When war seemed unavoidable, Carranza stemmed the tide by his proposal for appointment of a joint commission to settle the trouble amicably and the proposal was accepted by President Wilson. Deliberations of the commission resulted in withdrawal of the American army and restoration of friendly relations between the two countries.

Elected President March 11, 1917, when more than 1,500,000 votes were cast for him, Carranza took the oath of office May 1, 1917, as the first constitutional President of Mexico since the assassination of Francisco Madero, Feb. 23, 1913.

On the morning of May 1 the national flag was formally raised over all public buildings in Mexico City, and a salute of 21 guns heralded the new regime.

Carranza was married and formerly lived in Saltillo. His two daughters were sent to school in St. Louis and both spoke English and seemed to understand Americans.

A number of his nephews and cousins were also educated at American schools. Carranza was six feet tall and weighed 190 lbs. Carranza denied the charge often made that he was anti-American. He once said, however, that he was "pro-Mexican." He did not read English nor speak much of it. What he knew of the language he learned principally from his daughters and he seldom attempted to converse in English.

NATIONAL AUTOMOBILE ASSN.

Ample protection of life and property and a more stringent control of traffic to secure safety and added comfort, have become necessary on the more important National and State highway systems, is the belief of the American Automobile Association, expressed in action taken at its annual meeting just held in New York City. To its clubs throughout the country and to members generally the A.A.A. decided to recommend the establishment in their respective States of State constabulary or other satisfactory methods to provide daily and nightly patrol of the most important thoroughfares.

Referring to the tendency in certain states to finance road programs entirely from the fees paid by motor car owners, the users' organization reiterated its opposition to what it considers an illogical plan, and will urge everywhere the necessity for fair dealing in matters affecting highways taxation. It is the contention of the motorists that State systems should be built through general taxation, and with the registration and other automobile taxes reserved, as a general rule, for maintenance purposes.

Since Congress has not found time to answer the plea of the motorists for the acceptance of a single State registration in all other States for the entire twelve-month, it was voted that renewed efforts be made to secure the passage of the Sweet-Pitman bills during the present year, so that only one number plate would be required in 1921.

In the belief that the construction of main highways is an economical proposition at the present time, the meeting decided to protest to the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Railway Executives Association, and the American Railway Association against the curtailment of cars for the shipment of materials and machinery necessary to highway work.

The early completion of connection links on main routes and the proper maintenance of roads already built, it is contended, will help to solve the present-day transportation problem.

Among the resolutions adopted was one emphatically endorsing the Townsend bill calling for the creation of a National Highway System and a National Highway Commission. After favoring the adequate, effective and early improvement, construction and maintenance of all the Nation's highways, the opinion was expressed that the surest and quickest and most satisfactory method of accomplishing this desired result was through the co-operation of all the counties and the States with the Nation, each political subdivision assuming a definite mileage and responsibility.

SAYS LINEN WILL BE HIGHER

The prices of linen which have been soaring steadily have not reached the limit of their ascendancy, according to Thomas J. Clark, an important linen manufacturer of Upperlands, Ireland, who is visiting this country to look over the linen situation here. Mr. Clark maintains that there is little chance that collars and shirts will be any cheaper for a long time and the household articles which women covet such as table cloths and other household linens, will be even more expensive during the next few months.

"There seems no present prospect that there will be any break in price for a number of years," said Mr. Clark at the Hotel Pennsylvania. "The reason for this is the scarcity of flax owing to the fact that Russia, which has heretofore provided the world with about 80 per cent of its supply, has for such a long time been unable to contribute any. Ireland, while regarded as the world's linen centre, grows only a comparatively small quantity and although the acreage devoted to flax has been greatly increased in the past few seasons, Ireland's supply of flax is relatively only a small percentage of what is needed.

"It is rather odd that flax is grown in such limited areas, but at the same time it requires certain conditions to raise it successfully and the grower must know exactly how to handle the crop. We tried to raise a crop ourselves, just a small crop for experimental purposes. We left it out in the dew to become wet and lost the whole crop. So you can see it is not an easy undertaking.

"Apparently, we've got to look to Russia for our supply, although I know that linen manufacturers generally would be very glad to see an attempt to raise flax over in this country. And as for Russia—well, we've made some investigations there recently and they convince us that it will be years before Russia can take her place in the flax market again.

"And flax is the whole question. While labor prices have advanced, they are responsible for only a small part of the increased cost of linens. Our labor market is pretty good, although we've had, and are having, just about the same difficulties as you are having here."

HOPE TO INCREASE

ALASKAN MUSK OXEN

The treeless coastal plains of northern Alaska, from the international boundary to Point Barrow and even as far south as the Seward peninsula, were at one time the home of the musk ox. The animal seems to have been exterminated in those regions 50 or more years ago.

An effort is now to be made to re-establish this interesting little species of the genus Bos in the territory, the plan being to import from Coronation gulf or Melville island a sufficient number of specimens to form a herd. This accomplished, they can be bred for the benefit of natives and white settlers.

The present governor of Alaska in-dorses the scheme and suggests that a ship be sent to Melville island in summer, to winter there, and to return the following summer with a bunch of musk oxen. He believes that by this means an industry of great future value could be created.

Musk oxen are easily domesticated. Their meat is hardly distinguishable from beef, and their milk (about half the quantity yielded by an ordinary cow) is very rich. The shaggy hair of the outer coat covers a soft, long-fibered wool, equal if not superior to the finest sheep wool. Large bulls weigh from 600 to 700 pounds.

Musk oxen have not the roving instinct of cattle, and cannot be easily stampeded. When attacked by wolves (the principal enemy of game animals in the North) the adult members of the herd form a circle around the young, presenting an impenetrable front.

It is claimed that the musk ox combines all of the qualities most to be desired by a pioneer population in a desolate region. The wild wastes of northern Alaska, utilized as grazing ground for this picturesque beast, would thereby acquire important value, yielding great quantities of meat and wool.

VISITS FRENCH HOME OF 26TH

Hudson Hawley, foreign correspondent of the Home Sector gives the following picture of Neufchâteau, as the city is today, that picturesque city of the lower Moselle where members of the famous 26th division were billeted prior to their departure to go into action: "A rather anemic moon was shining down on the Place de Jeanne d'Arc, at the head of Rue St. Jean, when I arrived there—shining down over the tower of the Eglise St. Augustin on the head of the statue of the saint herself, as she stands there looking defiantly towards the north."

"The moon just lit up the little circle enough to bring back memories. There it was that the 191st infantry received its regimental colors and 23 of its members were baptized from a mess kit, the Sunday before they took train for Soissons and their baptism of fire.

"There it was that they marched in review before Gen. Edwards, their band playing 'Where Do We Go From Here?' to that doughty commander's keen amusement, for their destination was a close secret. There it was that the band of the 165th French Infantry used to play on alternate Sunday afternoons, the leather-lunged Yanks filling in the other dates.

"Down the little alleyway to the northwest of the place I debouched at last into the Place des Carrieres, now denuded of three-ton trucks and empty gas cans. Casting but a superficial glance at that monstrous one-ring circus that was then openly desecrating the Sabbath eve of the most New England town in France, I made a beeline for the Cafe Clement.

"It was a full hour and a half before call to quarters, but there was not a soul in the place save monsieur, madame and the cat.

"Tiens," M. Clement exclaimed, as I walked in with my hand out. "Un des Américains Un des gars de la Vingt-sixième! Alors! Vous-êtes rev-enu pour nous dire bon jour! Qu'est-ce que vous voulez prendre?"
