

FLOWERS GOT A

CROOKED TIP

After this, Theodore Flowers of 115 Gainsborough street, Boston, will have his tips verified before placing any money or anything on the strength of them, says the Bangor News of last week.

Last Saturday Mr. Flowers attempted to run the Volstead blockade from the border to Bangor in a fast car carrying 38 quarts of real Scotch, and at 3.30 Saturday morning he had got as far as fourteen miles south of Houlton before anything happened. He had been told by someone that the blank-city-blank federal officers were in jail, and that the road to Bangor was clear. That wasn't exactly so. The federalists had been arrested in an automobile collision case, but on Saturday they were as free as a couple of hawks and together with Enforcement Agent Christie they swooped down on Mr. Flowers and his outfit at the point mentioned.

Flowers was brought to Bangor and arraigned before U. S. Commissioner Reid, who held him in $500 for the federal grand jury, while the car was impounded in the sum of $3,000.

SOME FINANCIERING

An Augusta citizen recently returned from an automobile trip to Quebec says that what the Canadians have not learned to do to the thousands of Americans now touring that country is not worth knowing. For instance: A member of his party stood at the desk of a Quebec hotel to pay a small bill. Most of the guests at that hotel were also Americans. The bill was but $4.00 and he tendered an American $5 bill. The condescending clerk passed back a Canadian $1 bill. "Hold on," said the Yankee, "I want an American dollar." "Haven't any," said the c. c. "What, with all these Americans every hour paying you their money, you can't give me an American $1.00 bill in change—or won't, which?" And the c. c. would only mumble: "Haven't any."

The point of the story may be revealed when it is said that at that hotel and in the entire city, American money was at 20 per cent premium, which meant that a Canadian dollar was worth but 80 cents to a Yankee and the hotel had the Yankee from Maine both going and coming—making 20 cents additional on the payment of the bill and 20 cents on simply passing back his alleged change.

Wage Increase for
B. & A. Employees

The United States Railway Labor Board Friday handed down its first short line wage decision granting employees of the Bangor & Aroostook railroad in Maine, the same wage scale recently fixed for the big roads in the $800,000,000 wage increase.

Like all other wage decisions of the board, it is retroactive to May 1. Members of 14 unions are affected. The board did not estimate what the yearly increase would total.

In speaking of this action, President Percy R. Todd has made the following statement:

"The only reason why the B. & A. asked and received a separate hearing from the large roads and systems was because its officers felt in the first place that the cost of living to its employees in Maine is not so great to them as in the larger cities like Chicago and New York, and furthermore because under the present classification act of 1920, the increased cost will amount in the case of the B. & A. to between $600,000 and $700,000 per annum will ultimately have to be paid by the public; in other words the arguments made by the B. & A. before the labor board in Chicago were in the interests of the public."

"The B. & A. employ about 2,100 persons and this award aggregating between $600,000 and $700,000 per annum, together with the increases in wages which were made while the road was under federal control, will make a total increase in the payroll to the B. & A. employees since Jan. 1, 1918, of about $2,000,000 per annum. The total payroll was about $1,150,000 per annum so that the increase given since Jan. 1, 1918, amounts to about 130 per cent."

PRESENT RATES

The meetings will open the afternoon of the 28th, reception in the evening. Mrs. Thomas G. Winter of Minneapolis, Minn., president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, will be present on Sept. 28th and will address the meeting.

DEMOCRATIC RALLY

A large number of citizens assembled at Monument Park on Monday evening to listen to the speakers provided by the Democratic County committee.

James M. Pierce presided in a most pleasing manner and in opening spoke in a very forcible way, giving the reasons why voters should stand behind the nominees on the Democratic ticket. He then introduced Hon. Isaac Fuld of New York City, who spoke very interestingly upon the political issues of the day.

EVERYTHING READY FOR
NINTH ANNUAL FAIRLargest Midway Ever--Don't Fail to See the $1,000
Free-For-All Friday

The stage is all set for what promises to be the most successful fair in the history of the organization of the Houlton Agricultural Society which opened today.

A visit to the grounds gave striking evidence of the interest being taken. Committee heads were busy allotting space, placing stock, stabling trotters which were arriving hourly by various modes of conveyance.

The Midway sprung up like a magic city and chaos was turned into order by skill of experience, as the riding devices were erected, tents spread and what Saturday was a bare space, now is a small city of gay colored tents. Never was the Midway so complete, and with a fair share of good weather a good time can be assured.

The racing interests is at fever heat.

SPECIAL SESSION OF THE LEGISLATURE

Governor Carl E. Milliken on Thursday issued a call for the 79th Legislature to assemble in extraordinary session at 9 o'clock (standard) Tuesday morning, August 31.

The extra session is called for the purpose of making such changes in the registration laws of Maine as to render fully effective in this State the new Equal Suffrage law, which is embodied in the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States:

"The right of the citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex."

Governor Milliken was notified by Secretary of State Colby that the latter had issued his proclamation declaring the Constitutional amendment duly ratified by a sufficient number of the states, thus putting the amendment into force as law throughout the country.

Governor Milliken thereupon immediately notified by telegraph every member and official of the Maine House and Senate to assemble at the Capitol in Augusta on the day and date mentioned above for the purpose mentioned.

Governor Milliken also Thursday afternoon requested the members of the Legal Affairs and Judiciary Committees to assemble at the State House on the previous Monday afternoon (August 30) for the purpose of drafting a suitable bill to meet the occasion. These committees are composed of the following:

Legal Affairs—Senators Thoms of Penobscot, Garney of Cumberland and Parent of Androscoggin; Representatives Garcelon of Auburn, Hinckley of South Portland, Weatherly of Lincoln, Laupher of Sebec, Fagan of Portland, Hussey of Blaine and Mason of Ellsworth.

Judiciary—Senator Davies of Cumberland, Deane of Penobscot and Deering of York; Representatives Barnes of Houlton, Buzzell of Belfast, Baxter of Portland, Chaplin of Bridgton, Conary of Bucksport, Maher of Augusta and Murchie of Calais.

The calling on the 79th Maine Legislature in extraordinary session at this time gives Governor Milliken another record, in that it is the first time in the history of the State of Maine that any one Governor has found it necessary to call two special sessions during his term or terms of office.

A WOMAN'S STANDPOINT
Among the women of this section there has been more or less conversation over the right of Suffrage, which has just gone into effect, when the women of the United States will have the right to vote at the September election.

Previous to the final ratification of Tennessee there were many for and many against, and one lady the other day who was an anti said that she did not care much about voting and probably would not go to the polls. While this may be all right from one standpoint it would seem as though any woman should have interest enough in the government of the State of Maine to go to the polls, even though she may not care for it, for if those who would vote all one way should stay at home on election day and all those who vote the other way should go to the polls, it would make a great difference in the result. From the above it would seem as though every woman should vote on election day, even though it may be disagreeable, as a part of the duty that she has placed upon her, in the community in which she lives.

Sec. Henderson while apparently cool and calm warms up as soon as racing is mentioned and says that with the acquisition of the St. John entries which include "Peter Farren," "Lady Grattan," "White Sox" and others that he has the greatest bunch of speed ever collected for a racing event in Aroostook county, and here is the program for the four days:

Tuesday, Aug. 31—2-13 mixed, 2-22 Trot, 2-30 Pace.

Wednesday, Sept. 1—3 yr. old, 2-19 mixed, 2-17 mixed, 2-21 mixed.

Thursday, Sept. 2—2-20 Trot, 2-24 mixed, 2-18 mixed.

Friday, Sept. 3—$1,000 Free-For-All 2-30 Trot and named race for purse of $400.00.

The Free-For-All will bring the greatest galaxy of speed together that has ever been seen in this section, with 8 entries and without doubt 8 starting, as follows, "Zom Q," "Baby Doll," "May Bird," "Ben Ali," "The Problem," "Peter Farren," "Lady Grattan," "White Sox" and a good possibility of another starter in "John A. Hal." Some collection of speed this. It will be some race.

The following was the program:

HENRY HALL

Mr. Henry Hall, who has resided on the Calais road for a number of years, passed away very suddenly on Tuesday evening last at the age of 68.

Although Mr. Hall had not been in the best of health for some time, he had not been seriously ill and on the day of his death retired in his usual health, but soon after Mrs. Hall heard his heavy breathing and before a physician could be called he had passed away.

Mr. Hall was born in Richmond, N. B., coming to Houlton thirty-five years ago, and during his residence here he has been a successful farmer as well as a citizen who was much respected by all who knew him.

Besides a widow he leaves to mourn his loss a daughter, Mrs. Frank Logan and one son Almon. Funeral services were held from his late residence on the Calais road on Friday afternoon, Rev. Henry C. Speed, pastor of the Court street Baptist church of which he was a member, officiating.

REPUBLICAN RALLY

A large number of ladies and gentlemen assembled at the Opera House on Saturday evening, it being the first political rally of the season.

Seated on the stage were a number of prominent Republicans and the women's committee of the town, together with Hon. R. W. Shaw who presided, Hon. Chas. P. Barnes who spoke for a short time and Col. Isaac M. Meekins of North Carolina, a member of Congress who gave some very valuable information, treating at length on the League of Nations, interspersed with some stories, all of which were much enjoyed by those present.

Music for the occasion was furnished by the Bridgewater Band.

Maine State Election to be Held Sept. 12

The state election is to be held Monday, Sept. 13, and the polls will be opened at 6 o'clock in the morning, remaining open until 6 o'clock in the afternoon, in order for voters to cast their ballots for governor, state auditor, representative to Congress, state senators, county attorney, judge of probate, sheriff, county commissioner and representative to the legislature.

The following proposed constitutional amendments are to be voted upon at this time:

Shall the Constitution be amended as proposed by a resolution of the legislature granting to the legislature power to authorize towns to have more than one voting place for all state and national elections?

Shall the Constitution be amended as proposed by a resolution of the legislature providing for the issuing of state bonds for the purpose of paying a bonus to Maine soldiers and sailors in the war with Germany?

Shall the Constitution be amended as proposed by a resolution of the legislature providing that the legislature shall have the power to lay and collect taxes on incomes from whatever source derived?

Votes are also to be given upon the following Referendum Question:

Shall Chapter 129 of the Public Laws of 1919 entitled An Act Granting to Women the Right to Vote for Presidential Electors, become a Law?

The house was profusely decorated, yellow and green being the predominant colors.

The wedding march was played by Miss Jessie Gasman, while Miss Eva Cummings and Miss Della Brown acted as ring bearers.

Both Mr. and Mrs. McLaughlin are extremely popular among their large circle of friends, as the lavish display of gifts will testify.

A wedding supper followed the ceremony for the immediate family and invited guests, a large number of out of town guests being present.

About 8 o'clock the young couple left by auto for a short trip to the New Brunswick cities, after which they will return to Houlton, where Mr. McLaughlin holds a responsible position with the Aroostook Tel. & Tel. Co.

The best wishes of many friends is extended in which the TIMES joins them.

Caribou's three day Fair and racing events held last week were run off under the most favorable conditions, the weather being ideal for fast time, while thousands gathered from far and wide to attend.

Everybody was satisfied. The displays under the grand stand and poultry sheds were well filled, the platform attractions were up to date, and the racing was of the highest order.

In the racing events Houlton horses came through with honors, Harry Neviers driving "Somersworth Boy" for 3 straight in the 2-20 class, best time 2-19 1/4, and the 2-15 class "Peter Setzer" took the race in straight heats best time 2-13 1/4, while in the free-for-all "Zom Q" cleaned up the field in record time of 2-09 1/4, 2-10, 2-09 1/4.

Frank Fox of Medford, Mass., who is training here, also had good luck, getting second money in the 2-30 pace with "Marion L" and first place with "Alfred King" in the 2-18 mixed event and first place with Jimmie Forbes in the 2-30 trot.

P. Doherty drove Pearl Bourbon for a winner in the 2-21 mixed class, so that Houlton drivers have no reason to complain of their luck.

BAPTIST ASSO. TO MEET AT HAYNESVILLE

The annual meeting of the South Aroostook Baptist Association will be held in Haynesville Wednesday and Thursday of this week, when several matters of importance will be discussed. It is expected that in the future the annual meeting will be held in the spring and an effort is being made to place a missionary-pastor in this county who shall spend more time with pastorless Baptist churches than hitherto.

Among the speakers from away will be Dr. Clifton D. Gray, president of Bates college; Dr. E. C. Whittemore, secretary of the State Educational Board; Dr. I. B. Mower, secretary of the Maine Baptist Convention; Dr. W. L. Ferguson, missionary from India; Rev. William Reid of New York City representing the Board of Promotion and Rev. E. A. Davis, missionary evangelist.

The first service begins at ten o'clock Wednesday morning. Rev. Henry C. Speed is moderator and Rev. Mark Turner is clerk of the Association.

REGISTRATION OF RESIDENT HUNTERS OF MAINE

It seems strange that people have not yet become familiar enough with the laws of their own State so that they can go gunning with a feeling of safety so far as being bothered by an officer of the law, but it is a fact. The Department of Inland Fisheries and Game, as has been the case in previous years, has been receiving numerous inquiries relative to the resident hunters' registration certificates.

The law requiring the residents of Maine to procure a certificate of registration before they can hunt, pursue, take, catch, kill, destroy or have in possession any kind of wild animals or protected wild birds is found in Chapter 173 of the Public Laws of 1919. This law applies to all bona fide residents of Maine except such unnaturalized, foreign-born residents as come under the provisions of the alien hunting license law, so called. A resident of this State who comes under the 25-cent hunters' registration law must procure his registration certificate of the clerk of the city, town or plantation in which he resides, paying therefor a fee of 25 cents. The present law provides that these certificates shall remain in force so long as the licensee remains a citizen of this State.

The words "resident of this State," wherever used in the resident hunters' registration act, means a person (except aliens who come under the $15 license law) who has been a bona fide resident of Maine and actually domiciled here three months prior to his application for registration. The provisions of the law do affect the right of a bona fide resident and members of his immediate family to hunt without a license on land owned or leased by him on which he or his family are actually domiciled, and which land is used exclusively for agricultural purposes.

Alien License Law

Unnaturalized, foreign-born residents of Maine who have lived in the State more than two years continuously previous to the time they desire to hunt and who are taxpayers upon real estate, may procure a 25 cent hunters' registration certificate. Unnaturalized, foreign-born residents who have not lived in Maine for two years continuously previous to the time they desire to hunt and who are not taxpayers upon real estate in Maine are required to procure a $15 hunting license before they can hunt or have firearms in possession.

PRESQUE ISLE'S
MARDI GRAS CELEBRATION

The Selectmen of Presque Isle have granted permission for the sale and use of confetti and paper streamers for the Mardi Gras celebration to be held on the evening of September 10, the closing night of the Centennial and Fair. They also voted to close the Square to traffic between 7.30 and 10.00 p. m. in order that the evening celebration may be held there.

Music for Presque Isle's big celebration will be furnished by Fort Fairfield Band, by Millinocket Band and by Tinker's Orchestra.

The Fort Fairfield Band and Tinker's Orchestra will work exclusively for the Centennial while the Millinocket Band will be loaned by the Northern Maine Fair Association for the big parade on Tuesday.

Do not forget the Fair during all this week of the celebration.

"THE DOUGHNUT GIRLS" AND THEIR FATHER

On Wednesday the Salvation Army officers of New England assembled in Boston for the official farewell to Lieutenant Commissioner and Mrs. Adam Gifford, who after twelve years in Boston are to take charge of the army work on the Pacific coast and in Hawaii, with headquarters in San Francisco, both of whom have many friends in Houlton. On Thursday the same corps of officers, some 300 in number, welcomed the new commander of the New England forces, Col. William A. McIntyre, who comes from New York city where he has wrought for 22 years. So under the army's organization commanders are shifted from post to post about the world. Boston well knows the story of Commissioner Gifford and all New England has approved his record.

Col. McIntyre, called of late years the inventor of the doughnut idea and the father of the girls who distributed doughnuts to our boys in France—thereby scoring a hit which did not cease with the termination of hostilities—has had a most interesting life. Born in a log cabin in the Middle West, attending his first Salvation meeting when 15, converted at 17 and at 19 offering his services to the Army, he ever since has been an officer in the organization founded by Gen. Booth. While still under 20 he was put in charge of a territory; at 30 he commanded in Buffalo, whence he came to New York. All the New York papers have been narrating picturesque incidents in his career, printing special farewell articles now that he is to leave the New York office to start a term of service in New England. He likes to recall his "Boozers' Banquet" of six years ago, when 250 reformed men met to celebrate their faith in the Salvation Army; among them were merchants and salesmen, bankers and professional men. He says that in his 36 years of Army service he has had six vacations; that when he came to New York he found the organization owned "two buildings and one little shack," whereas now it has 125 buildings, making its real estate worth several millions of dollars. His policy has been "to secure these buildings in the proper sites and place fair mortgages upon them, and then to pay off these mortgages, to have the Salvation Army branches own their own homes whether in city or village."

Col. McIntyre has eyes to read the signs of the times. He says that "he has learned that conditions of religious and philanthropic work have changed materially in the last 22 years. Work similar to that of the Army has multiplied and divided the field." That is a true observation. Very likely Gen. William Booth himself would modify somewhat the methods he used in the early years of the Army if he were directing the work today. The doughnut enterprise is one illustration of Col. McIntyre's readiness to accept suggestions and adapt them to existing needs. Adj. Margaret Sheldon suggested giving the Yankee soldiers doughnuts. In time she became the doughnut mixer and Adj. Helen Purviance did the frying, while the colonel's daughters handed them out to the soldiers. The first doughnuts manufactured in France were passed out just as the troops were going into action in the Toul sector. And as the "doughnut girls and their father" the colonel and his daughters have been known ever since in New York.

MAINE'S MOUNTAIN MONUMENT

(Boston Transcript)

In these days of 75-cent butter one reads with envy in Thoreau's journal of seventy-five years ago about that commodity being so plentiful and cheap in the Penobscot forest settlement that it was used by the farmers and lumbermen to grease their cowhide boots. The Concord naturalist went into the Maine wilderness in that summer of 1846 to visit Mount Katahdin. It was a long, hard journey, but he found it well worth while from his point of view as an admirer of mountaintops. For some years a railroad has run to within thirty miles of the summit, but it is only recently that the people of Maine have come to discover that this mountain of theirs is one of the noblest monuments in nature, and merits their veneration and care. What could be more appropriate, therefore, in this centennial year of the State's establishment, than the proposal that this splendid mountain should be purchased in the name of the public as a monument to the progress of a century?

A State park of from sixty to one hundred thousand acres that would embrace the several peaks and spurs, and enough of the surrounding upland to afford ample space for camping parties about the base is the ideal that is now being advanced by a group of influential citizens, supported by the leading papers of the State. Such a mountain park would not only constitute a worthy centennial memorial, it would also be a business investment of ever-increasing value to the public. Maine has long enjoyed the patronage of the "sports," as the followers of rod and gun are known in the Down East vernacular. It must also be apparent to the people there that there are also those who never fish nor hunt who are ever waiting to be invited to visit attractive wildernesses, for their holidays. The very phenomenal growth of the National Park patronage in the West in recent years is assurance that there is business in the proposal for Maine. Moreover, a reservation established on park lines presupposes a prohibition against hunting within its borders, thus creating a sanctuary from which the open regions round about may be better stocked for the benefit of those who follow the chase.

Thus far Maine is the only member of the New England group that has not set apart wild parks or forests in the public interest. Massachusetts has purchased seven mountain, hill and gorge reservations, in addition to its purely economic forest undertakings, which are also secondarily in the playground class. New Hampshire bonded itself to buy the Crawford Notch, that that celebrated mountain feature might not be blighted by ruthless logging, and it similarly maintains several hill reservations in other parts of the State. Along the Green Mountains Vermont offers the public numerous recreation tracts aggregating thousands of acres, some held as parks, other as commercial forests. Within the past five years Connecticut has bought upward of a score of wild and semi-wild bits throughout the State under its State park act, and Rhode Island has for some years enjoyed a series of near wildernesses, even close to its most populous centers.

In Maine there are indeed public reservations, but they are not of Maine's creation. The White Mountain National Forest extends into eastern Maine for some distance. A group of public-spirited summer residents on Mount Desert Island bought some ten thousand acres of hill and shore and presented the Lafayette National Park to the country. The Appalachian Mountain Club, in its capacity as a public trustee, has acquired and maintains at its own cost two reservations in Maine, one a mountain top, the other a beautiful river gorge, both at all times freely open to the enjoyment of all. It is to be hoped that the incoming centennial year Legislature will add to these a State Park on Mount Katahdin.

REPUGNANCE TO WORK

Laziness may be as old as mankind. It is a malady of a sporadic character, attacking individuals here and there or at irregular intervals, and incapacitating them by paralyzing the energy which is requisite for efficiency. That is bad enough. But a worse disease has now appeared, and the world suffers from an epidemic of a positive dislike of work. So we are told by close observers whose competency and opportunities for observation entitle them to be heard. Gen. Booth, the Salvation Army chief, on his return to London from a tour around the world, says that he finds emerging in every country what, for want of a better word, he calls "a kind of antipathy to work," which is a very serious danger, especially for the next generation, if it is going to implant the idea that in work there is something inimical to human life and happiness. The question of hours of labor is a mere incident, altogether apart from "this growing feeling of approaching animus toward work," and he is right in declaring it "a frightful thing that a man should have a constitutional objection to labor." Yet he has to deplore it as being widely prevalent. He says it is one of the dangers in Australia. He found it last year in Scandinavia, and he finds it in every country.

A number of years ago, when shorter hours of labor were introduced, the workers did as much work or more in the reduced period. Neither the employer nor the employee lost by the substitution of the eight-hour day for the ten-hour day. But there has come a remarkable change. It is said, for instance, that in Illinois the output of coal by the miners has been falling, with every decrease in hours and increase in pay. Again, it is shown by statistical tables that the same process is going on among the miners in South Wales. In other occupations the same tale is told. And outside of all occupations there are crowds that turn up their noses at anything but "soft jobs," and would really rather be idle than industriously employed. Does Prof. T. N. Carver exaggerate in saying: "A man has to be an unusual individual who to-day can hire labor and make it produce enough to pay its own wages?" In the reconstruction of the world wrecked by war the imperative call is for increase of production, yet the call goes unheeded by a vast number who should be active in the ranks of industry. The general unrest, whether due to the world war or not, has upset their mental equilibrium. Assailed and infected in the mass, as if permeated with something like the mob spirit, they have fallen easy victims to this psychological disease of repugnance to work. There is but one cure for it. Work must work it out.

KATAHDIN AS A MEMORIAL

(Boston Herald)

A bill is to be introduced at the next session of the Maine Legislature for the acquisition of the Katahdin region as a Centennial Park, thus making of the little known but splendid Mount Katahdin a most impressive memorial of the century of the state. An expedition has just returned from an extended trip through that section of the state with a mass of information for presentation to the legislators. The amount of the equipment they had to take along and the length of time required for the trip indicate how comparatively inaccessible Katahdin is today.

The leader of the party was not extravagant when he said: "As long as it requires a three days' journey to reach the point from which the climb is made, and a complete outfit of men and horses, few people will attempt it. With a suitable road and with camps along the route, Mount Katahdin will rival if not surpass Mount Washington, for the latter mountain with all its grandeur does not possess the deep precipices, the beautiful coloring, the booth-like peaks, the wind-swept plateau and the great basin or crater of Katahdin. Under state ownership all this will be opened to the public, and such a state park would make a fitting memorial or monument by which to commemorate the 100th anniversary of Maine's statehood."

By all means, let Katahdin be made accessible, and if it becomes a state park, so much the better. Vermont has her Green mountains, and the trail from peak to peak across the state ought to become in time a great attraction to visitors and inhabitants. New Hampshire long ago learned the value of her beautiful White Hills. Maine has her thousand lakes and her wonderfully indented coast line; now let her capitalize Katahdin. Long the Penobscot river was the only thoroughfare to the mountain, and its upper courses are interrupted with shoals and falls. Round the great block of ancient granite the river flows, dividing at its base. The neighboring valleys isolate the mountain where it faces southward, soaring more than a mile above the level of the sea. The recent explorers, like all who have gone before them, have much to say about the Knife Edge, a stretch of some distance where the average width of the trail is four feet, with sheer cliffs on each side, dropping from 500 to 1200 feet. Over portions of this trail they found it best to get down on all fours. Real mountain climbing is available in the ascent of Katahdin.

THE YOUNG CROWD

Elderly and middle aged people frequently deplore the follies of the younger generation. They see the fast set with their "check to check" dances, and observe immodest dressing among the young women. They deplore the extravagance of the young people as they spend money for sweets and amusements and dress, and they find fault generally with them for frivolity and shallowness.

Yet in all ages the older people have thus deplored the ways of those who were to succeed them. As far as extravagance goes, it should be remembered that formerly the majority of young people spent their vacations in idleness. Now most of them are doing useful work.

It must be admitted that families seem looser now. There are many divorces for frivolous reasons. Yet it may well be doubted if there are more moral lapses than in previous periods.

There is always a great deal of foolishness and wickedness, and always has been. People ought not to rest satisfied unless they have done their best to bring about higher standards. And powerful social agencies are working for such improvements, that did not previously exist. The women's clubs, the boys' and girls' clubs, are a tremendous force working against all these decadent tendencies, and there are many others.

So people ought to use all these good forces as a means for reducing the ever present evil and foolishness of the world. Human folly brings human suffering, and sensible people can be made to see it. Every club and church and school should be a center from which should flow helpful influences. You can't help young people much by denouncing their errors. The best way is to give them incentives to good work and healthful interests. Then they won't have time or energy for wrong courses, and won't be so much interested in the evil in the world.

INCREASING PRODUCTION

The American people have been told about a million times during the past year that they can solve their economic difficulties only by increasing production. But no one who hands out this advice seems to give any practical suggestions as to how production can be increased.

Practical efforts to increase production must work along two lines: First through standard methods by which any kind of work is stimulated and systematized, and made to proceed along the lines of least resistance. Second, by showing every worker that it is for his personal interest to have production increased. Standard methods don't help much, if the people who are to operate them are silently hostile.

has its production department, whose task it is to see that a good volume of work is turned out. A great many concerns that are working along old fashioned lines, ought to adopt the methods of a good efficiency expert.

One of the reasons why Germany before the war attained such maximum efficiency in the industrial field, was that German manufacturers have for many years maintained factory training departments. In Germany newly employed persons were tested and trained for the work they had to do. By scientific methods they were fitted for their jobs. The worker profited as well as the employer. The result was a superior production that benefited the public.

The war compelled English and French producers to introduce these systems, and there has been some movement in this country in the same direction. A bulletin of the U. S. Dept. of Labor, claims that production in this country is 35 per cent below normal, due to lack of efficient training. This is a serious handicap in competition with Europe, and it helps to keep up the cost of living.

POLISH FARMER WINS FORTUNE HERE

With the young men of the country swarming to the cities to improve their prospects, and with constantly recurring tales of the abandoned farms of New England, the story of Peter P. Mokrzecky, who came to this country as an immigrant at 10 years of age, and who has made more than $80,000 from a Connecticut Valley farm in sixteen years, is enlightening. And the Connecticut Valley is replete with similar instances, only varying in the degree of prosperity attained by the newcomer to this country who has settled there. Here is the story as told by a correspondent of the Springfield Republican:

Forty years ago Levi Stockbridge, a pioneer in scientific agricultural education, was called from his North Hadley farm to the presidency of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, and twenty-four years later Peter P. Mokrzecky, a young Polish immigrant bought the old Stockbridge farm, then known as the Belden place. Stockbridge left the farm and accepted the presidency of the college primarily to help young men become better farmers, and incidentally to make his own living. Mokrzecky went to the farm primarily to earn a living for himself and his rapidly growing family, and has incidentally taught by example many young men how to become more prosperous farmers and better citizens.

Mokrzecky came to this country when only 10 years old. The summer he was fourteen he worked out on a farm for $6 a month, the next year he received $7, the third year $10 and the fourth year $14 month. The last year from his small savings he bought a carload of onions and sold them back to the same man three months later at a profit of $140. Nothing, probably, that he has done since has pleased him more than this. It stimulated his ambition, and he determined then and there to become a successful farmer.

In 1904 he bought the Belden farm for $4,500, paying down $1,500 in cash. In three years he paid off the mortgage of $3,000, and in 1910 he bought additional land, until now he has about thirty acres of tillage. He is by no means one of the largest tobacco and onion growers of North Hadley, but he is one of the best. His work is usually done on time; the weeds rarely get the jump on him, and his crops commonly bring top prices.

His first speculation in onions did not turn his head from legitimate farming, as it does a good many men, and the main source of his income has always been from the sale of his own produce, although one year he built an onion storehouse and made $12,000, the next year he lost $13,000. He has also had his share of bad luck, especially in the way of having his tobacco badly damaged several times by hail, but that was, not the least bit discouraging to a man of his type.

The Mokrzeckys have six children, but as the oldest is only 16, they have not been able to help much though they have all worked hard. Nevertheless they have not been ground down by toil like some of the onion growers, and they have lived well according to the standards of the average New England farmer.

One year Mokrzecky sold his tobacco crop for $15,000 cash and with most of his living expenses obtained from other farm produce, he has had no trouble in laying aside enough, he says, for his old age. Most savings he has invested in first mortgages given by Polish friends and acquaintances that he felt reasonably sure would make good. He is not a man to talk about his wealth, but on Jan. 1 of the present year, before he sold his 1919 tobacco crop, any disinterested competent person could easily figure up about $40,000 of real estate and personal property which he owned outright.

The records of the registry of deeds of Hampshire and Franklin counties show that he holds mortgages, the face value of which amount to $43,698; accordingly, his wealth must be about $83,698. In addition to this he carries $26,000 life insurance in one of the best old-line companies, payable in event of death to his wife, Marya, and five children, Jan, Ludwika, Teofila, Wladyslaw and Kazimierz share and share alike. The youngest, a little girl only 6 months old, came along since the policy was issued, but Mokrzecky will see to it that she is provided for so as to show no partiality.

The children, even to the youngest, all have savings bank accounts of their own. That this could all be done on a New England farm by a man only 37 years old seems almost unbelievable to one outside of the Connecticut Valley or Aroostook County, Maine.

It may be too much to say that the Mokrzeckys are the wealthiest Polish or Lithuanian family in this vicinity, but no one would hesitate to put them well up among the leaders. Mokrzecky has recently been elected a Director of the Hampshire County Trust Company of Northampton.

FRANCE PLEDGES AID OF ARMS TO BELGIUM

General terms of the defensive military alliance between France and Belgium as drawn up by Marshal Foch of the French army and the Belgian chief of state have been received in official circles.

Military support of France by Belgium in future armed conflicts is pledged upon condition that France prove not to have been the aggressor. Belgium also reserves the right to remain neutral in all disputes between the interests of France and other nations in France's colonial possessions. Details as to France's pledge to Belgium have not yet been received.

The alliance is to endure for a period of from five to fifteen years. Attempts of Belgium to induce Great Britain to join with France in the defensive alliance, the official advisers stated, have so far been in vain. The last visit of King Albert to London was said to have been in the interest of influencing a favorable decision by Great Britain. The unresponsiveness of British government was attributed to disapproval of the precipitateness of Belgium in extending with France the occupation of Germany in April without first having obtained the sanction of the supreme council.

SALT USED IN JAMS

Housewives can economize on sugar used in making jellies and jams if they will follow the advice of home-hold experts of the United States Department of Agriculture. Experiments made in the experimental kitchen of the department indicate that in making jams or jellies one-fourth to one-quarter less sugar can be used.

Another sugar saving which is suggested by the experiment kitchen is to add one-quarter teaspoon of salt to each cup of fruit juice for jelly or jelly for jam, marmalade and conserve. In the case of non-acid fruit this makes the absence of the full amount of sugar less noticeable. The salty taste will disappear after the product has stood for a few weeks, but the flavor will be much the richer for the addition of the salt. Salt was so used in England during the war, and the method suggested was based on reports of the process.

With fruits of pronounced flavor, or where lemon and orange peel or spices are used for flavoring those with mild flavor, various syrups take the place of part of the granulated sugar. Usually half and half is the proportion used in substitution.

HOW SUGAR MADE CUBA A WORLD EL DORADO

Sugar, like shoes, we once took for granted. Now procuring enough for the preserving season may be a problem, and sugar "speak-easies" are not uncommon in lands where the supply is rationed.

Writing to the National Geographic Society, William Joseph Showalter says:

"With a sugar production nearly doubled and prices more than quadrupled since 1912, one can readily see why Cuba is the world's El Dorado of 1920, and why sugar is its king.

"The imagination is almost overpowered in attempting to comprehend the vast proportions of the sugar industry of the island as it exists this year.

"The cane produced is of such tremendous volume that a procession of bull teams, four abreast, reaching around the earth, would be required to move it. The crop would suffice to build a solid wall around the entire 2000 miles of the island's coast line as high as an ordinary house, and thick enough for a file of four men to walk abreast on it.

"The wealth the outgrowing sugar crop brings in is not less remarkable in its proportions. Four hundred dollars out of a single crop for every human being who lives on the island—a sum almost as great as the per capita wealth produced by all the farms, all the factories and all the mines of the United States!

"What wonder, then, that Cuba today is a land of gold and gems, richer than Midas ever was, converting Croesus, by contrast, into a beggar!

"Sugar cane is grown by three classes of planters in Cuba. Perhaps the major part of the crop is grown by share farmers, or 'colonos,' as they are called. The owners of the sugar mills furnish them with a given number of acres of land to plant and give them an agreed share of the sugar they produce.

"The next class is composed of the land-owning farmers, who grow their own cane and have it ground on shares, after the fashion of the rural gristmill. The remainder of the cane is grown by the owners of the mills themselves. At some central the 'administration' came, as that grown under 'central' management is known amounts to only 4 per cent. of the total; at others it amounts to 50 per cent.

"Even the share farmer, at pre-war prices, made money. According to 'Cuba Before the War,' the official handbook of the republic at the Panama-Pacific Exposition when sugar was selling at 2.62 cents a pound, his share of the sugar brought him, on the basis of 12 sacks to the acre, a return of from $46 to $51 per acre. The return of the planter owning his land was from $56 to $61 per acre. When one remembers that the selling price of sugar is from four to six times as high in 1920 as it was then, the size of the per-acre income today is apparent.

"How much net profit the sugar grower reaps at 1920 prices is hard to estimate, but that it is large will appear when the methods of cane-growing are stated. To begin with, after the first crop the planter does not have to bother with seed-time, for about 14 years. The soil is so rich, and so fertile that one planting produces 14 harvests. Neither does cultivation bother him after the first season, for the blades stripped from one crop form a mulch that keeps the weeds from competing with the next one.

"Think of the profits that the American farmer would make out of corn if he could get 10 crops from one planting, and did not have to sow one of them at all to keep down the weeds!

"Another item in the low cost of producing sugar is the cheapness of the motive power. The cane is hauled in ox-carts. The oxen live from six to 10 months a year on the blades stripped from the harvested stalks, and the remainder of the year on succulent guinea-grass. Think how prosperous would be the American farmer if he could have animal motive power requiring not a pound of grain to feed it!"

MEXICO TURNS OVER NEW LEAF

Mexico is done with revolutions and has embarked upon a program of economic, political and social development which will surprise the world in a few years, Gen. Salvador Alvarado, publisher of El Heraldo of Mexico City and secretary of the treasury in the provisional government, told members of the associated advertising clubs of the world.

He outlined an ambitious program for the rehabilitation of Mexico, first among which was a reorganization of the nation's banking system, upbuilding of the Mexican railroads, creation of a merchant marine and employment for thousands of men who have made a living fighting under various leaders.

He denied that there was widespread anti-American feeling in Mexico.

"We are your sincere friends," he declared. "We adore your strength, your vigor, your enterprise, your system, your wonderful discipline of mind and body, individually and socially, and we are eager to assimilate your methods.

"We resent, naturally, the antagon-

PLAN NEW HONOR

TO WASHINGTON

Members of the Masonic fraternity in New York are much interested in the movement that has been started in Fredericksburg, Va., to have Nov. 4 set apart as a national annual Masonic memorial day in commemoration of the date upon which George Washington became a Mason. It was on Nov. 4, 1752, that the Father of His Country took the degree of Entered Apprentice in Fredericksburg Lodge, No. 4, and the movement to honor the day had its inception with his mother lodge. William G. Galt, Grand Master of Virginia, has written William H. Rice, Master of Fredericksburg Lodge that he will suggest to the lodges of his grand jurisdiction that they meet on Nov. 4, 1920, in commemoration of the date upon which Washington "saw light."

The launching of the movement for a new Washington birthday was announced in the current issue of The Masonic Standard. The article in part reads:

"Fredericksburg was Washington's mother lodge, the one in which he was initiated, passed, and raised, and remained a faithful member till his death, and it still has the Bible on which he was obligated in all three degrees, the original minutes recording these acts, the compasses that rested upon the Bible at those momentous meetings, and the inscribed punch bowl from which his health was drunk afterward."

"And during all these 168 years Fredericksburg Lodge seems to have been absorbing and hallowing and spreading the pure Virginia influence that came in its natal year, when Washington, then under 21, crossed the Rappahannock from his mother's old farm, where he spent his boyhood, to consecrate himself still further to good citizenship and Masonic service."

Washington's Birthplace

"Washington was born only forty miles from Fredericksburg, at Wakefield on the Potomac, just twelve miles from Stafford, where Robert E. Lee, another idol of the Southland, was born, and was taken in infancy to the big farm on the hillside over the river, that he might have the advantages of schooling and association with others of his own age."

"And so Fredericksburg was his playground during the important formative years when he was unconsciously training for the stupendous work to which he was destined."

"Though first visited by white men in 1622, and officially organized five years prior to Washington's birth, this town is still possessed of the clean, simple fundamentals that have always characterized Virginia—noble men, beautiful women and fine, honorable conduct. Though perhaps the bloodiest battleground of the civil war, with hillside bearing the honored graves of 25,000 Unionist and Confederate dead, its spirit has mellowed those frightful days into sadly sweet memories of valor and chivalry, consecrating the heart-wrung soil into a living lesson of devotion to historic ideals, hospitality and service."

"A visit there of only two days would show this to any one and it affected Brother Thomas S. Clay of Astor Lodge 603 and editor of The Masonic Standard on Memorial week-end two weeks ago. Brother Clay was born there; but he has lived in New York for a quarter century and his returns to his birthplace are always a revivifying in the old Virginia wholesomeness. To the other it was all new."

"Though arriving there late at night they were met at the train by a dozen officers and members who drove them to the Princess Anne, the prize hotel of the place."

Saw Old Lodge Records

"The next day began the showing about—through the musty records of the lodge, now housed in a rickety old temple dating from 1815, though on a wonderful site on the high road through the South; about the Masonic burying ground with slabs from the 1740s, and finally the drive over the long snake road, under the pilotage of Andrew Grimes, an old-time guide of Oak Grove, to the monument on the river bank occupying the site of Washington's first home."

"On Monday they went over the Civil War battlefields—to Salem Church, Chancellorsville; the monument marking the place where Stonewall Jackson was accidentally mortally wounded by his own men; another where he and Lee had their last conference an hour before the tragedy of the monument erected by the 23d New Jersey Volunteers "to the brave Alabama boys, our opponents on this field of battle, whose memory we honor"; the site of General Sedgwick's death from a sharpshooter; to the Bloody Angle and Spottsylvania Court House and Spottwood Inn for midday dinner. This latter was built in 1720 and still serves genuine Southern dinners, the kind that can be found nowhere else but in the old South."

"The return journey was over historic military roads to the city, with a side trip across the river to the Washington farm, where are still found direct offsprings of the famous cherry tree and one of the old farm buildings existing in Washington's time; up to the Lord Chatham mansion, where Washington spent his honeymoon and Lee did his courting, now owned by Mark Sullivan, a New York newspaper man; to the Rising Sun Tavern kept by General George Weedon prior to 1775; the Mary Washington town house and the monument erected to her by the women of America, and, finally to the National Cemetery, where lie 15,250 dead Union soldiers, of whom 12,770 are still unknown. This is on the famous Maryes Heights where every one of those boys lost his life in trying to carry out General Burnside's order to take this impregnable position late in 1862. Memorial exercises were going on."

"The day closed with a special communication of the lodge in compliment to the visitors. Brother Clay presented gifts to the lodge—which he is always doing—and a while was spent in inspecting the ancient relics and minutes."

FOR PHILIPPINE EXPLOIT

General Peyton C. March, Chief of Staff of the United States Army, received the Distinguished Service Cross for an act of bravery performed in action in the Philippines twenty-one years ago. The decoration was conferred upon General March by order of the President. The citation as officially issued at the War Department reads:

"General Peyton C. March (then Lieutenant in the Astor Battery), for extraordinary heroism in action before Manila, P. I., Aug. 13, 1898. He gallantly led a charge on the enemy's breastworks, volunteers having been called for by the Brigadier General commanding."

General March has just returned from a month's tour of France, Belgium, Great Britain and Germany. He said that irrespective of friction over the League of Nations and other matters, the French people were universally friendly and grateful to the people of the United States.

"This feeling," he said, "was particularly noticeable on Memorial Day, when tribute was generously paid to the American dead. The feeling toward the United States everywhere in France was fine, and all over Belgium it was nothing less than over-coming."

In Paris especially, said General March, warm gratitude was exhibited toward America. Marshal Joffre, he continued, was enthusiastic about the 75,000,000 francs given by individual Americans for the support of the nation of 22,000 French war orphans.

"In the devastated areas, and in the ly effective steps are being taken by the Belgian and French people," said General March, in alluding to the work of reconstruction. "In Belgium all the peasants are sowing crops, and towns which were literally wiped out are beginning to show evidences of recognition. France has not been so rapid in this work, but steps have been taken to clear the battlefields of barbed wire entanglements and other impedimenta of war."

"All the cemeteries in which American soldiers are buried are well kept, with abundant grass and flowers growing, and a white cross over each grave. At each cemetery a hostess house is located, where accommodations are available for all American visitors who come to view the graves of their relatives."

"The permanent cemeteries in France, Belgium and England are in excellent shape and will be maintained in good order. There will be approximately 25,000 American bodies which will remain in foreign soil."

The German people are well fed, their children look well, and little suffering exists, according to General March. While speaking of Germany, he declared that the American Army of Occupation had won a "unique place in military history," because of the fine morale of the men and their cordial relations with the allied troops. While in the American area General March inspected the American forces at Coblenz. He also reviewed the British, Belgian and French troops at their headquarters.

"The American Army," General March said, "did not suffer from this comparison. A system of athletic contests between all the allied forces has been arranged, and the superiority of the American soldier athletes has been pronounced. The United States forces had a walkway in all the contests, and particularly were out men supreme in boxing contests. Four champions from the British forces and the French middleweight army champion were excelled by their American opponents."

General March said the French were developing a new type of tank which American ordnance experts were studying for possible use in the American Army.

Better appreciate your mother before your appreciation of her will be no kindness to her, and the post-mortem regrets will be more and more of an agony as the years pass on. The headstones of polished Aberdeen and the best epitaphs which the family put together could compose and a garden land of whitest roses from the cemetery are often the attempt to atone for the thanks we ought to have uttered in living ears and the kind words that would have done more good than all the eulalia lilies ever piled up on the silent mounds of the cemeteries."

JAPANESE PAPER

ATTACKS AMERICA

Assertions that Americans are "rostering disloyalty" among the people of Japan and that American missionaries in Korea are "using the cloak of Christianity to instill anti-Japanese sentiment there," are made in a series of articles appearing daily in the newspaper Kokumin Shinbun. This journal is considered the organ of the military groups, and its proprietor and editor is I. I. C. H. I. R. O. Tokutomi, one of the leading journalists of Japan.

America is declared to be "using Japanese educators, thinkers and business men as tools to spread dangerous thoughts, destroy military discipline and influence Japanese youths to avoid conscription in the army." The newspaper says Americans "foment labor troubles for the purpose of hindering Japanese industrial development and reducing her production."

"America is puced up since the war," says another article, "and considers herself the sole arbiter of the world."

Plans for a larger United States navy are regarded by the writer of the articles as "completely removing America's false mask of justice and humanity" and "exposing her claws of militarism." America is seizing every opportunity to protest against Japanese actions and is influencing China against this country, it is alleged.

Spotless Empire

"Many of our intelligent men are enamored of America," the Kokumin says, "and because of this public opinion is not excited, even when our national dignity and the rights of our empire of spotless perfection have been insulted."

The latest article quotes a "former high official in the Korean government" who names a dozen or more American missionaries who are charged with instigating a Korean revolt against Japan. This article asserts that during the Korean insurrection mobs were influenced and assisted by the Americans.

It is said Leo A. Bergholz, former American consul-general at Seoul, published an article which discussed the theory that it is the privilege of peoples to insist upon self-determination, and declared the Japanese were wrong in refusing to listen to the Koreans. Specific details are given in the discussion of charges against some missionaries. A review of the newspapers of Japan shows that influential journals have refrained from attacks on America. They hold the opinion that the Japanese occupation of Russian territory is not wise, as it is likely to create complications with the powers.

GERMAN GAME FOR FRANCE

Game is not only of value to the sportsman, but it is distinctly an asset to the other classes of citizens, says a bulletin of the American Game Protective Association. Not only does the pursuit of game improve both the physical and mental health of the nation, but the livelihood of thousands of our people depends directly upon the hunting of game, the writer says. It would be hard to estimate the number of men who earn their living by the manufacture of articles used by the sportsmen. Sporting ammunition and guns are but a small part of the gunner's needs, as compared with special footwear, clothing, boats, tents, camping outfits and other necessities.

The money that the sportsmen of the United States spend each year for railroad fares and automobile, hotel and restaurant expenses easily runs into big figures, to say nothing of the vast army of men employed and the thousands of dollars spent in this country in breeding, protecting and caring for game to provide the sport. The breeding, training and care of shooting dogs is an industry in itself, while in every section where game is plentiful you will find men who act as guides or earn their living directly from the game by catering to the needs of sportsmen. The food value of the game killed each season is sufficiently great to demand that it shall have adequate protection, says the bulletin.

The game of France suffered heavily during the war, not only in the regions where heavy fighting took place, but by the organized methods of Germany of killing the game to augment her diminishing food supply. After the war an association of French sportsmen demanded that Germany be made to repay to the gunners of France, not a cash valuation of the birds and animals killed, but game from her vast reserves to restock the covers she had so ruthlessly harvested. The bulletin says:

"According to the Paris Temps, the Reparations Council did not think the matter of much importance, as they considered hunting simply as a form of amusement. However, when they saw that the sportsmen were insistent in their demands, they made an investigation and quickly realized the economic value of the game to France. The sportsmen won their fight, and the proposed plan is that France shall demand from Germany and Austria live game to the value of 25,000,000 francs. Germany and Austria must each furnish in four half-yearly installments, 250 stags, 1,000 hinds, 200 male and 400 female roe deer, 200,000 male hares and 400,000 females and 2,000,000 brace of partridges. In addition, Austria must furnish 1,000,000 pheasants. The greater portion of the game will be liberated immediately upon arrival, under the supervision of experts. The balance will be held on game farms as breeding stock, these farms to be controlled and operated by the French Government."

MEXICAN GAMINGDENS MUST CLOSE

Gamblers who have held sway in all parts of the Mexican republic for many years have been ordered to close their games.

The Chamber of Commerce of Tampico and Monterey had protested to the president of the republic against the spread of gambling, which was ruining commerce in Laredo, Tampico, Monterey and Juarez, where gambling was exploited by concessions obtained from the government of Carranza. Several games which were running in Mexico City have been ordered to close at once, and De la Huerta has stated that all games of chance must be stopped.

Additional orders are to be issued to close all cabarets, which were open centres of vice.

The president is also studying a plan to declare a dry zone along the American border. It will probably comprise a strip 150 meters wide, from Sonora to Matamoras.

TEACHING BRIDES THE ANCIENT ART OF HOUSEWIFERY

Those amiable ladies, our great grandmothers, did their own work, and took pride in their household arts. And now that cooks and maids may seldom be found for love or money, and such as are found are as evanescent as summer dew, gone in a twinkling, why not make a virtue of necessity and revive the ancient and honorable science of housekeeping? So many women reason. But sundry patient young husbands have learned from stony biscuits and burned bacon that the girls of the generation just reaching the housekeeping age have mostly given their time and attention to anything and everything except domestic efficiency, and have as little idea how to run a house and make a garden as a kitten has. To meet these conditions, one woman has conceived the unique idea of a school for brides —and for those who hope to be—where the accomplishments of an older generation are taught. She converted her summer home into such a school, and outlines her project thus:

The idea which Mrs. J. D. Livingston is putting in practical effect is to train girls in the old and yet ever new art of housekeeping. There have been for a number of years camps where girls spent their time in healthful play amid wholesome surroundings. Mrs. Livingston, who in recent years has devoted much attention to practical education, has arranged a course for prospective brides that will equip them to run a household with any number of servants, or take hold of the work themselves and be able to manage it, and yet have time for other interests and other work. She has planned and arranged a course to simplify and standardize housework, to make domestic science a means, not an end—a means to comfort, to pleasure, to be used effectively so as to have time for other work.

tively so as to have time for other work.

Her purpose—and the plan as outlined gives full promise of the accomplishment of that purpose—is to help women in the future to have homes and professions, not to be confined to the choice of homes or professions.

Garden Home, as Mrs. Livingston calls her summer place at Barnstable, has been planned out after much thought as an agreeable and healthful place in which to put into operation this new idea of hers.

In working out her plan, Mrs. Livingston receives a limited number of girls of sixteen years or over, for the summer season, who learn from practical experience, under properly qualified teachers, the actual daily duties of a well-ordered, simple house and the care and management of a vegetable and flower garden. Says The Minute Man:

The quaint old village of Barn-stable, on Cape Cod, is a delightful summer residence, near the open sea, the pine woods, with sheltered coves and shaded walks within easy reach. There Mrs. Livingston and her associates teach and exemplify, among other things, the simple duties of a country home, the routine of work indoors and outdoors, that makes for comfort and for health, with bathing and sailing and tennis.

A RULE OF SAFETY

Think of Others as You Ride and Walk About Town

It is very interesting to watch people in their daily disregard of everybody but themselves. Men and women walking along the sidewalk will suddenly stop short or turn right around without a thought of whether there is somebody else with whose progress such action might interfere. Automobile drivers will start out from the curb without any sort of signal and others will stop short in the highway or turn to a cross street with no notification.

Similarly, pedestrians will walk across a street without a look to see if any vehicle is coming along. Often an automobile driver will notice some person cross the street in front of his approaching car without once turning the head to see if he or she is in danger. Others will stand in a doorway and block it without thought of any one who happens to want to pass through.

This attitude is the cause of many of the too numerous accidents. Inattention is another word for it, but in fact it is self-absorption. These people do not think of anybody else. The question is how to make them realize that there are other people with equal rights with themselves. So far as automobilists are concerned, there are pretty stiff regulations which are likely to be impressed generally, but for pedestrians we need a lot more of attention. The policy of requiring every one crossing a street to do so under a policeman's eye is useful. If that notion is sufficiently enforced, it will in time make a dent in people's minds and effect a change in their habits. But meanwhile there will be a lot of "accidents."

JOURNALISM IS NOT A RESTFUL PROFESSION BUT—

Young men looking for a nice, soft job often pick out journalism as an occupation that offers a maximum of repose, together with a reasonable amount of pelf and not a little distinction. It looks both easy and interesting to sit at a typewriter and pound out column after column of stuff that thousands of delighted readers will stay up until a late hour to read. But "journalism is not a restful profession," avers John M. Siddall, editor of The American Magazine, in a letter to The Yale Daily News discussing the journalistic game as a line of endeavor for college men. Then he goes on to speak of the journalist's responsibilities, his long hours of work, and the numerous chances his job offers to make fool mistakes. True he offsets this with mention of the opportunities for expansion offered by journalism and its irresistible appeal through its opportunities for coming in close contact with people and learning the ways of the world. Mr. Siddall names love of reading and writing, consuming curiosity, tact, transcendent wonder, and alertness as the prime qualifications of the modern journalist. He says:

Don't think of journalism as a career unless you really like to read and write. I mean just that. Perhaps you think that everybody likes to read and write. Not at all. I know lots of people who take no interest in reading or writing. They never read anything except a few brief news reports, and they have no passion to communicate ideas and stories to other people by means of writing. They may have a passion for other things—trade, building, organizing, and so on—but they care little for reading the written communications of others or for putting into writing their own emotions, knowledge, and observations. If you are thinking of journalism, search your heart on this subject. If you find that you have no desire to be trying continually to write, and if you find that you have no genuine love of reading, avoid journalism and take up something else.

Another thing that a journalist or writer must have is consuming curiosity about other human beings—the most intense interest in their doings and motives and thoughts. It comes pretty near being the truth to say that a great journalist is a super-gossip—not about trivial things, but about important things. Unless a man has a ceaseless desire to learn what is going on in the heads of others he won't be much of a journalist—for how can you write about others unless you know about others?

Another quality of prime importance in a journalist is the ability to get on with people. This is what you might call human sense or tact or diplomacy. If you are to get things out of people you must be able to get on with people. Journalism is no place for a cantankerous individual. It is a great place for a good listener. If human beings annoy you—if you don't like to see them around—go lock yourself up in a laboratory and discover a cure for cancer. Go anywhere except into journalism.

Finally, in journalism men are needed who have a natural sense of wonder. Unless you get excited over what you see, hear, and feel, you won't go far in journalism. It is a profession especially adapted to enthusiasts—men capable of rising to a white heat. You must wonder at man's achievements, at man's stupidity at man's intelligence; at his honesty, crookedness, courage, cowardice—at everything that is remarkable about him wherever and whenever it appears. If you haven't this sense of wonder, you will never write a novel or become a great reporter, because you simply won't see anything to write about. Men will be doing amazing things under your very eyes—and you won't even know it.

So far as work in college goes, I don't think it makes much difference what you study. Everything under the sun goes into the hopper of a journalist. He can use anything and everything he knows. Just grab everything you can.

The college man is, as a rule, good reportorial timber. He has a trained mind. He has learned to concentrate, to crystallize his ideas, to put his observations into clear, concise English. He can cash in on these accomplishments immediately if he decides on journalism as a profession—they are prerequisite and essential tools.

But if the young college man with a flair for journalism thinks he is embarking on a get-rich-quick career he is going to be disillusioned. At the beginning he will undoubtedly receive a larger salary than the man who adopts a business career, but within ten years or so the business man will probably be ahead of him financially. This doesn't mean that journalism is a blind-alley profession. It isn't. Its opportunities are many and far-reaching. A good journalist can make a very substantial income, but his chances of becoming a millionaire through his pen are negligible. So I would tell the young man who wants a big monetary reward to choose some other career.

But for the young fellow who is keen about writing, who is willing and anxious to accept plenty of responsibility, journalism is an ideal field. Responsibility! Young, fresh, and green, he is plunged into it right up to his neck. He has to take all kinds of chances, make quick decisions, keep a clear head and a sanely balanced mind. A fool step and not only he but the whole organization is embroiled in trouble. He has constantly to watch his step and learn to be as wary as a cat walking on a high ledge.

SENATE TO HOLD UP NOMINATIONS

The Senate will reject all nominations for important patronage offices submitted for confirmation by the President at the December session. This policy has been laid down already by Republican leaders as essential in building up the patronage machine of the party after the eight years of control over federal officers held by the Democrats. Cox Democrats have also subscribed to the policy, so that the Senate will follow the same plan of rejection, regardless of which party may be in control after November. Gov. Cox has recognized the necessity of availing himself of "patronage support" in the campaign and his friends are, therefore, passing the word that Wilson appointees at the next session will be held up so that, if the Democrats are successful, the new administration will not go into office without any "plums" for the faithful.

It is expected Governor Cox will put this phase of the future of the party squarely up to the President at the Sunday conference. The President is enough of a politician to recognize the merit of the argument, it is stated, and he is not likely to interpose any objection except in the case of a few appointees, regarding whom he may wish to exact some assurances from the new Democratic leader.

The policy of non-confirmation scheduled for the next session of the Senate will make it exceedingly difficult for President Wilson to secure the acceptance of desirable appointees for any of the important posts now vacant. This has already appeared in the case of Governor Samuel W. McCall, appointed to the tariff commission, who two weeks ago declined to accept until he had some assurance the Senate would act favorably on his nomination. This assurance will depend on the attitude of Senator Lodge and former Senator John W. Weeks toward the McCall election. If Governor McCall can make his peace with the Senate Republican leader and with Senator Weeks, who is going to have an important post in the campaign, his nomination may be excepted from the general policy of rejection. Without the Lodge-Weeks approval, however, Governor McCall has small chance of favorable action.

The program of killing Wilson appointees in the Senate will defeat the intended plan of the White House to indulge in a little "political sniping" within the Democratic party between now and next March. According to reliable reports from the White House the President has let it be known that all departments between now and next March would be checked against the tally sheets of the Frisco convention. This meant that the men who "put over" Cox at San Francisco were to be eliminated from the patronage left in the hands of the President. It is not expected that the President will undertake to execute this plan after Governor Cox has presented his side of the case at the White House conference next Sunday.

If the President accepts the new Democratic leader's views on the matter, which will mean Governor Cox must be consulted on all important appointments, the administration attitude toward Senator David L. Walsh must be reversed in Federal appointments made in the Bay State between now and March.

There were 19 important patronage offices to be filled before March, not counting the offices to be named through resignations. These include seven members of the shipping board and three members of the interstate commerce commission. The vacancies on both bodies pay salaries of $12,000 under the new legislation enacted at the last session. Another important federal post on which there is certain to be no action is the comptroller-in-chief of the currency, now held by John Skelton Williams through successive recess appointments, the legality of which has been questioned. The only New England appointments affected are those of Gov. McCall to the tariff commission and of Daniel J. Gallagher to succeed Federal District Attorney Boynton at Boston. The status of the McCall case has been set forth. The Gallagher appointment is certain to suffer "quiet death" no matter which party controls the Senate.

If the Republicans win in November,

"Every boy and girl in this country is entitled to an equal chance and should have the right to attend a good school." That program is the basis of a country-wide campaign "Good Country Schools," starting next week in

The COUNTRY
GENTLEMAN

In this series Mr. A. B. Macdonald graphically presents the growth of the consolidated schools, using a little Arkansas town as illustration.

If you have children or if you are interested in the future welfare of this community, it will pay you to read each of these articles. The first one, which appears next week, contains helpful suggestions which can be applied right here at home. But that is only one of the many good things in this particular issue. There's an enlightening review of "The Railroad Tangle," including the rate advance; a timely article on farmer cooperation; a review of the Holstein recent census; corking stories and—but why go on? Surely you'll get two cents' worth in each issue. And for less than two cents a week 52 big numbers of this Great National Farm Service are yours—a copy every Thursday. Send me your check for $1.00.
