

the touch of the electric bell. He was fond of Wundham, for he knew with

[illegible]

A black and white illustration showing a man in a white lab coat standing next to a man in a patterned suit who is sleeping in a large armchair. A newspaper is on the floor in front of the chair. The man in the lab coat is looking at the sleeping man. The man in the suit is wearing a patterned jacket and trousers. The newspaper is open and lying flat on the floor.

upon the panel, turned the knob, pushed the door open gently and stepped aside to allow Wyndham to pass him.

Pendleton was sitting in the depths of a large, comfortable armchair in a far corner of the room, and Wyndham, believing that he had fallen asleep unintentionally, started forward to awaken him, while James remained in the doorway. But he had taken only two or three steps when he paused abruptly.

Wyndham's head had fallen forward on his breast. In the very center of his shirt front just below the point where a single diamond gleamed was an object sticking out. Underneath the pale splashes of red, looking downward until it was lost from sight behind the buttoned waistcoat, and Pendleton—burr Pendleton before he had been killed—was lying dead. There, in the heart of Wyndham's life, was death.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

There Are Two Kinds of Mustard.

black and white. Black mustard is the most valuable for commercial purposes. Its seeds are very minute, weighing not more than one-fiftieth of a grain each. Its pungent taste is caused by an essential oil. This oil can, like fruit flavors, be exactly imitated, by the chemists. Both as a table condiment and as a medicine mustard has been known from a very remote period.

As now found in our grocery stores, the sauce consists of white and black mustard seeds, mixed and ground fine. The white mustard keeps better than the black variety and is not so bitter.

A good deal of the mustard sold is adulterated with wheat flour, wheat bran, but more often with tumeric, the pulverized root of a common East Indian plant.

The Quick Craze.

The quick craze is by no means new.

but seems just now to be more industrious than ever before. Here in young Washington, he has been, for hours a day to cultivate her voice. Result, lost voice. Nearly all the pugilists, active and retired, are writing volumes on "How to Get Strong Quick," and the readers are exceedingly numerous. In the afternoon, when minutes are quite enough. Result, lost health. The get rich quick fellows, in jail and out, are hiring able lawyers to help them devise schemes that will defy the law and enable them to travel lands, regardless of the code—New York Press.

Both Caught.

There are two Portland women who have lost faith each in the other. They are both members of the Little Church on the Hill, and on emerging from the hall found a sharp shower in progress. Each announced to the other that she

They departed into different stores, ostensibly for that purpose. When, ten minutes later, the women met in a Spring street trolley car, no allusion was made to the matter. — Kennebec (Me.) Journal.

Candles.

Such candles as peanut butter are far less injurious than fancy mixtures, at times they are made by simply melting sugar and tallow with acids. Acid in the presence of heat splits ordinary sugar into two forms, dextrose and levulose. These are both deadly sweets and much more potent in fermentation than real sugar. This is the reason why so many housewives cannot make good candied fruit or other jelly.

The Great Qualification.

The animals were preparing for another trial theatricals.

"I want to be the biggest villain," said the sheep.

"You!" snorted the intelligent horse.

"Maybe not," retorted the sheep, but I'll bet none of you can bet the saying in "Bah" — Catholic Standard and Times.

How She Got Over the Grip.
"I ain't done took de grip myself yit. Bruddah G. oseberry. My ole woman she was poorly yid all, but she got over it sho'ly."

"I zo glad to heah dat, Bruddah Or. eland."

"Yes, she died wid it."—Lippincott's Magazine.

Suspicious.
Mrs. Jenkins—I see Mrs. Hoeting going to have "King Lear" at her next private theatricals.

Mrs. Newrich (furious with envy): Is she, the affected thing? Do you know, I don't believe he's a real king at all.—Exchange.

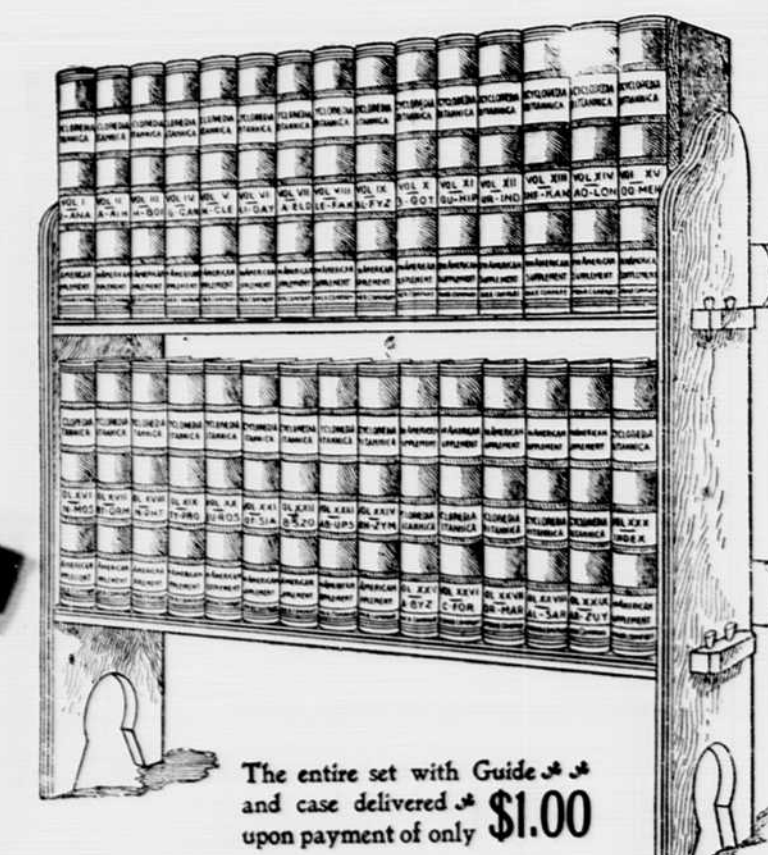

W. J. WHEELER,
South Paris.

Pianos and Organs,
Piano Stools,
Covers
AND Instruction Books.
—AT—
Reasonable Prices.

FITS
STOPPED FREE
Permanently Cured by
DR. KLINE'S GREAT
NERVE RESTORER
Cures all cases of Epilepsy, Hysteria,
Neuritis, etc.
Bottle, 50 cents.
631 Arch Street, Philadelphia. Free trial.

FOR ONE DOLLAR
You Can Secure a Set of

The New Werner Edition
ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA
—IN—
30 Superb Octavo Volumes.

The entire set with Guide and case delivered at only $1.00
Balance payable in small monthly payments.

PRICES AND TERMS:
CLOTH, $45.00 (formerly $64.50), $1.00 down and $3.00 per month thereafter.
HALF MOROCCO, $60.00 (formerly $94.50), $2.00 down and $4.00 per month thereafter.
SHEEP, $75.00 (formerly $98.50), $3.00 down and $5.00 per month thereafter.
For further particulars call on or address
F. A. SHURTLEFF & CO., South Paris, Me.

BAUER'S
LAXATIVE-BROMO-QUININE
TABLETS
Are the Best Remedy for Colds, Headache and Grippe. They break up a cold quickly, move the bowels gently, carrying off fever and other poisonous matter from the system. Guaranteed to cure. Try them. 50 cents. For sale by F. A. Shurtleff & Co., A. D. Dyer, Bryant's Pond, Orin Stevens, Oxford.

Nasal CATARRH
In all the cases there should be drainage.
Ely's Cream Balm cleanses, soothes and breaks the downward drainage. It cures catarrh and drives away a cold in the head in a few days.
Ely Brothers, 50 Warren Street, New York.

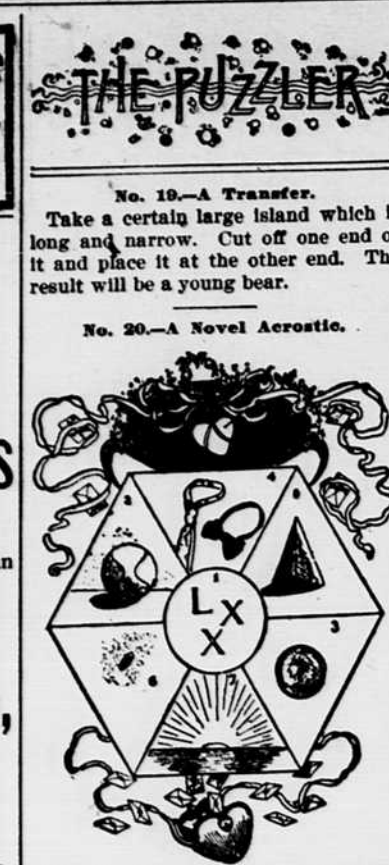

TOY GRAPHOPHONE.
Childhood's Greatest Entertainer
Most Fascinating of all Toys
Wherever there are children there should also be a TOY GRAPHOPHONE
SINGS NURSERY SONGS PLAYS DANCE MUSIC REPEATS MOTHER GOOSE RHYMES
Send $1.50 and the TOY will be delivered expressage prepaid.

COLUMBIA PHONOGRAPH COMPANY
164 Tremont St., BOSTON.
We are headquarters for Farming Tools and Fertilizers.
We can show you some of the best and most reliable tools in the market, both in steel and wood. We have Disc, Spading and Spring-tooth Harrows, Corn Planters, Cultivators, &c.
We are also agents for the Walter A. Wood Farming Machinery.
We have in stock three full sets of Farm Tools, for sale at a low price.
A. W. Walker & Son,
Maine, Mar. 11, 1901.

BEECHAM'S PILLS
Cure Indigestion, Constipation, Biliousness,
10 cents and 25 cents at all drug stores.

A LOW PRICE
—ON—Wool Carpets
to close out odd patterns and clean up stock.

Chas. F. Ridlon,
Corner Main and Danforth Sts.,
NORWAY, MAINE.

The six pictures grouped around the middle circle may each be described by one word of four letters. When these six words are rightly guessed, select two letters from each word. Letters, when preceded by one letter from the word describing the middle picture, will spell the name of a day on which Cupid is very popular.—St. Nicholas.

No. 21.—Square Word.
1. A false object of worship. 2. A gentle bird. 3. Found in your kitchen. 4. In your temporary possession, but not belonging to you.

No. 22.—Notable Novels.
1. An Ass beat her T. 2. H. D. a bore. 3. W. on k. w. crack box thief. 4. Crest is his.

No. 23.—Word Building.
1. A vowel; add to this another letter, when it becomes an article; add another, either as a prefix or as a suffix, and have a utensil used by bakers and gold washers; add another and have the space from the end of the month to the end of the little finger when extended.

2. A vowel; father; a spring of mineral water; the extent of an arch between its abutments; a country of Europe.

No. 24.—Rhymed Central Acrostic.
All the words described contain the same number of letters. When rightly guessed and written one below another in the order here given, the central letters will spell something sent in February.

My first is a bird as black as night;
My second, a fruit purple and bright;
My third is a grain that is not eaten;
My fourth is a grain that is not eaten;
My fifth is something about a door;
My sixth is a flower that none abhor;
My seventh, a verb, means to keep hold;
My eighth, a flower of purple and gold;
My ninth is something very strong;
Yet it has no music; I am not wrong.

No. 25.—Rebus.
1. Behold a pretentious and have a short, dignified poem or song. 2. The head good esteem and have a wing. 3. Behold to be melted and have to accustom.

No. 26.—Degrees.
Positive. Comparative.
1. A linen ribbon. A candle.
2. A boy who wishes to be thought clever should cultivate closing the mouth firmly. But its curves when closed are governed by the thoughts in its owner's mind, and cannot be made firm and gracious, until the thoughts are of that character.

Conundrums Answered.
Why do the rich only eat venison? Because it is dear (deer).
Why is it easy to break into an old man's house? His gate is broken and his locks are few.
When does a farmer double up a sheep without hurting it? When he folds it.

Key to the Puzzle.
No. 9.—Single Acrostic: Napoleon. 1. Naisad. 2. Altar. 3. Psoas. 4. Ousel. 5. Lithe. 6. Eclipse. 7. Orange. 8. Nimbus.
No. 10.—Triangle: 1. Scrimp. 2. Crane. 3. Rank. 4. Ink. 5. Me. 6. P.
No. 11.—Progressive Enigma: Bunker Hill.
No. 12.—Query: The letter E.
No. 13.—Transpositions: Stop, pots, spot, tops, spin, pins, slips.
No. 14.—Connected words:
N N L O D T L
E L N O O H
I V U L O O C P
E L N O O H
N N L O D T L
E L N O O H

No. 15.—Meshes:
A L E X A N D E R
S K A L A B U R
A L P T
A N T I P O D E
R E A U T O U R

No. 16.—A Winter Song:
When icicles hang by the wall,
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail,
And Tom bears down into the mill,
And time comes round the year,
When nights are long and ways are foul,
Then nightly sing the starting owl,
Tut-tut!
Tut-tut! tut-tut! a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.
No. 17.—Anagrams: 1. Village, cottages, clean, gardens. 2. Discovery, planet. 3. Rabbit, trap, escape.
No. 18.—Parts of the Body: Sawteeth, clock, temple, waist, neck.
When dizzy or drowsy take BEECHAM'S PILLS.
Better to lose your argument than your friend.

Is it a burn? Use Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. A cut? Use Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. At your druggists.
"Boo-hoo! I just bought 5 cents' worth of doughnuts, and 'nere's a hole in every blamed one of them!"
Kidney complaint kills more people than any other disease. This is due to the disease being so insidious that it gets a good hold on the system before it is recognized. Foley's Kidney Cure will prevent the development of fatal disease if taken in time. F. A. Shurtleff & Co. Orin Stevens, Oxford.

Happiness only comes by the plant measure. That's why some folks prefer misery by the bushel.
FAVORITES NEARLY EVERYWHERE.
Constipation means disordered health. Dr. Williams' Little Early Biscuits relieve this condition. Never give. Favorite pills.
"MY FAMILY DOCTOR."
BROOKLYN, N.Y., Jan. 14, 1901.
Messrs. Ely Bros.—I have used your Cream Balm in my family for nine years and it has become my family doctor for colds in the head. It relieves it freely on my children. It is a Godsend to children as they are troubled more or less.
Yours respectfully,
J. KIMBALL.
Judge for yourself. A trial case can be supplied for the small sum of 10 cents. Supplied by druggists or mailed by Ely Brothers, 50 Warren St., New York. Full size, 50 cents.

HOMEMAKERS' COLUMN.
The greatest enemy to our general health is a neglected cough. It is dangerous to allow a cough to run; by so doing you put yourself in a condition for consumption to take a firm hold upon you. Ninety-nine per cent of the cases of consumption are caused by a neglected cough. Statistics prove it.
When the cough first commences is the time to stop it. Bane's Instant Cough Cure is a guaranteed cure for coughs, colds, bronchitis, influenza, grippe, whooping cough, and all other throat and lung troubles. It is guaranteed to cure or your money will be refunded. The enormous sale of Bane's Instant Cough Cure is positive proof that it cures or the people would not buy it. Ask the following druggists for a free sample bottle and try it: F. A. Shurtleff & Co., A. D. Dyer, Bryant's Pond; Orin Stevens, Oxford.

WHEN THE BABY CRIES
Marianne Wheeler, who is an expert on baby culture, gives some rather startling advice to those who imagine babies should always be soothed when their feelings are hurt to the crying point. For instance she asserts that if the baby is to live he must cry, and since this is necessary any parent who objects to hearing her child cry in a hearty and healthy manner is selfish in considering her own nerves before the welfare of her child. She says:
"Instead of quieting him, on the contrary, it should be a mother's duty to insist that her baby indulges in a certain amount of good healthy crying each day. A whining, fretful cry is not a beneficial one. It must be a good, strong, hearty cry, during which the baby draws in a deep breath and holds it a few seconds, thus expanding the little lungs to their fullest extent. It is this which strengthens and toughens the lung tissue. A child with lungs thus made strong and healthy does not catch cold easily."
"Therefore, the mother who is given to remarking insistently: 'Stop that crying, now, or I'll spank you,' should change her monologue to 'Cry on, toot-toot-toot! It's good for your lungs!'"
"And if the midnight howler disturbs your slumbers, do not resort to the alms, but steel your nerves to endure it to the end. We tried a number of little ones on your part will bring its self-reward, and even if you don't get much sleep you will be unharmed by the cry of the good thing it is doing the child to cry."—Exchange.

SELF BEAUTIFYING.
Every little while the newspapers report marvelous results of new attempts to correct, by surgery, physical defects that have seemed heretofore incurable. One reads advertisements of specialists for the cure of various blemishes of body and skin. The cured spine may become straight and strong, the crooked nose may be given a better contour, and the rough, wrinkled skin may become smooth and soft. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the warning: "For every evil thought shall give account," and the unholiness of heart can be read to-day by the expression of the face. It is clear, then, that the present age, making its greatest stand for sanitation, is laying the foundation for physical beauty for future generations. And physicians are not all there is to the beautifying of the face as is the feature themselves. The thought of the man is reflected in the face, sooner or later. No one can be of kindly heart and earnest aim without showing in the expression of eyes, brow and lips the effect of that disposition, and, contrariwise, none can keep from the countenance a reflection of malicious or vain fancies. Nineteen hundred years ago there was given the