Dear Mr. Stevens:

On Saturday night, December 15th, I was down to your old home in West Gardiner. My visit came about through a combination of circumstances. First, the Grange had arranged for a special Stevens night. There was to be presented a portrait and a photograph of the monument commemorating your interesting night on the mountains at Marius Pass. Your old friend, Judge Spear, was to deliver the address. He was indisposed, so they had to look around for a substitute. I was elected. These circumstances explain my presence in West Gardiner, and explain why I am writing at this time.

I thought that probably you would like to know something about the celebration. So far as I could judge all the community was present. There were six or seven of the friends of your boyhood. I do not know when I have been present at so simple, beautiful and whole-hearted a celebration. Everyone was so enthusiastic and so keenly appreciative of the achievements of their engineer. It certainly would have warmed your heart if you could have listened to their conversation. I doubt very much if any of the honors you have received (and they certainly have been many and distinguished), would have been more appreciated than the tribute of these people in your old home town. It was so genuine that I could not help feeling that in some way all their tributes of love, respect and admiration must find their way across all the miles to you.

I told them some of the more important events of your life. Of course I stumbled a bit on your school teaching days, because I did not have very much information. I could not find very much about your surveying work in Lewiston and not much more about your sojourn in Minneapolis. However, the other spots are so very high that no one could miss them. At the end of my little talk I said "The story of John Frank Stevens tells you four things".

1. The inspiring power of a great motive.
2. The necessity of unyielding courage.
3. The absolute need of education.
4. That if you are shut out of college, technical schools, through books you may acquire knowledge for the highest tasks and most difficult achievements.

I wonder how near I came to the truth.

It was good to talk to Eben Horn, who certainly is an enthusiastic admirer, and there were several others just like him, -- everyone of them on tip toe to tell me some interesting incident.

Well, I have written all these things thinking it might be interesting for you to have some word from these old friends of other days.

Very truly yours,

Dear Mr. Stevens:

We are sending you many thanks for your courtesy in furnishing us with biographical material. This is invaluable for our files.

The death of your friend Judge Spear is a very great shock. He has spent many, many hours in my office during which we have discussed everything in the universe, not excepting farming and fishing -- especially the latter. One of the very great fish stories connected with Maine is in my files as the result of our conversation. A few days before he died I was talking with him; I am sure he never looked better, and he told me he never felt better. His death came very suddenly. Judge Spear was a good citizen, a careful scholar, a great friend, and a Christian.

Should you come to Maine this year I hope I may have you for a dinner guest. At least, linger for a little bit in my office.

Dear Mr. Demnaak,

Referring to your letter of Dec. 19, in which you ask for some biographical data concerning myself, I am mailing under another cover some matter which may interest you and perhaps find a place in your files.

I have just received the sad news of the passing of Justice Spear. I am deeply grieved. At the time of his passing, I had known him for 64 years. Well so goes the world - A long and a full life is God's obligation to all men.

Very Sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. Dunnach-

Your letter of 19 Dec was read, and I quite fail to be able to express my thanks for your thoughtfulness. I have written a few lines to the Apache - to our people - freely voicing my appreciation of what they did for me. I hope at some time in the not distant future to be able to see and speak them all.

I will try to send you some data as you suggest for I would consider it an honor to have my name preserved in the files of the Indian State Library.

Very sincerely yours,

I was thinking of the West Jardin school house.
If you can do so— that is—renote the name of the Agent—
I think it is called one and the number of that school District— I think it would be better for me to communicate with the Agent himself in the matter of having a new letter from that school

I will be in New York

Dear Mr. Stevens:

The superintendent of the schools of West Gardiner is Cyrus M. Kendrick, Litchfield, Maine. He has three or four towns in his district. The teacher of the John F. Stevens School is Miss Irene Libby, Litchfield, Maine, P. O. D. 3.

It means a great deal to those of us who are situated in the far West to have the privilege of meeting a man who has just come from the center of things. We are grateful beyond words for your gift of the statue, and I assure you it will be one of our invaluable possessions.

Dear Mr. Stevens:

We received your note this morning and note what you say about the local school agent.

My first letter gave you the name of the superintendent: but from your letter I think the person you want is Mrs. Arthur H. Gosline, Route 7, Gardiner, Maine. Mrs. Gosline is the chairman of the school committee for West Gardiner. But to make positively sure I have called Mrs. Gosline and find that she has charge of the John F. Stevens School.

Dear Mr. Stevens:

The statuette arrived in perfect condition, and we have placed it on the right of the door as one enters the library. We have also placed a card with information in regard to the person whom the statuette represents. The statuette is attracting a great deal of attention and many interesting and enthusiastic comments.

I understand you are moving shortly to Baltimore. I should like very much to have your new address.

My dear Mr. Stevens:-

I am writing for our Library Bulletin a note on the copy of your statue which you have recently sent the Maine State Library, and I find that we do not know the name of the person who made it. This is, of course, relatively unimportant, but we wish to have all available information about this very important addition to the library's treasures. Will you please tell us the name of the person who made out copy? I hope that some day I may have the pleasure of seeing the original.

My dear Mr. Stevens,—

Thank you for your letter about the statuette.

I knew that the original statue was made by Mr. Cecere (I am so glad that you mentioned the correct way to pronounce his name!) it is very interesting to know that he made the statuette, also.

I have read with much interest "The blazed trail of the old frontier."

Dear Mr. Stevens:

We have received the "Blazed Trail of the Old Frontier". It is quite a wonderful book, but of course the chapter dealing with the discovery of Maria's Pass was the one that we read with the greatest interest. One paragraph arrested my attention. I cannot but quote:

"Great engineers, like great architects, and great artists, and great poets, and great musicians, must have the gift of imagination. No enterprise of first magnitude was ever projected without some forward-looking mind visualizing the objective. What a stupid world this would be without imagination! It is a gift, like a marvellous power conferred by a benevolent fairy upon the handsome prince. It is a magic wand that solves difficulties and opens up vistas and pathways".

In fact the whole chapter from my way of thinking is well written, and tells the story of John F. Stevens in a fashion that leaves a memory that cannot be erased from the mind.

I do not remember whether I thanked you for the Panama Canal pamphlet or not. We greatly appreciate your courtesy in sending us the official document. It contains the information we have been looking for for some time. Personally I have never quite understood the situation at the canal and your part in it in relation to General Gorgas. We are placing this in our Maine Author Collection where Maine students will be able to consult it.

Dear Doctor Stevens:

I have just read your "Momentous Hour at Panama" given on the occasion of your receiving the Franklin medal. It seemed to me to be particularly fitting and proper that on that occasion when all the high officials who participated in the building of the canal had passed away but yourself that the facts should be stated in such a fashion that no doubt should be left in the minds of any as to what actually occurred during those early years in connection with this great project.

I congratulate you most heartily on receiving this deserved recognition and honor. We have only one regret at the Maine State Library, that before publishing the little article in connection with the statue at Marias Pass we could not have had this additional information. However, a note will be made in the forthcoming issue of the Library bulletin.

We are very grateful for the pamphlet taken from the Franklin Journal containing your address on that occasion.

Dear Mr. Dunham,

Thanks for your letter of July 29. It may interest you to know that the United States Geographic Board (established by Act of Congress) in 1929 officially named the Canyon of the Flathead River, extending some 30 miles west from Marias Pass—"the John F. Stevens Canyon"—this being of course on the west slope of the Rocky Mountains.

Very hearty regards.

Augusta, Inc.
AUGUSTA.—John Frank Stevens, a famous son of West Gardiner, came back to Maine the other day, called on State Librarian H. E. Dunnauck and presented to the Library a bronze copy in miniature of the heroic statue of himself, by Cecere, which stands in a Rocky Mountain defile, marking the site of the exploit that first brought him fame.

John Frank Stevens, equipped with only the education afforded by common schools of West Gardiner, began his preparation for the engineer's profession as a stake driver on a lot-surveying job in Lewiston. To him has come the highest honor that can be conferred by the four National Engineering Societies—the John Fritz medal, an honor which he shares with such men as Alexander Graham Bell, Orville Wright, Marconi, and Westinghouse.

It was Stevens who made the successful beginning of the construction of the Panama Canal, undertaking in 1905 the task in which the French had failed, solving the perplexing problems presented by Culebra Cut, and carrying on as engineer in charge until 1907, when the work, its success assured, was transferred from the civil to the military department. Five nations decorated him for his services as head of the American Railway Mission to Russia throughout and after the war.

After an apprenticeship in the humbler tasks of construction Stevens became an assistant engineer on the Rio Grande's extension in Colorado and New Mexico, later he was location engineer for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway, and joined the Canadian Pacific in 1882, distinguishing himself by the completion of 1000 miles of railroad in one short Summer. Often at night, after a day of exhausting toil, he drove from 20 to 30 miles in a buckboard over the prairie, seeking the most desirable location for the road.

It was in 1889 that his services were obtained by John J. Hill whose Great Northern line had still the Rockies' forbidding barrier to cross.

An Indian legend told of a pass through the mountain wall, and Stevens' observations of the land and of the water courses strengthened his belief that there was a way through. Stevens sought the help of the Indians, but the legend that told of the existence of a pass told also of its inhabitation by an evil spirit, and they feared to aid him; all but one Kalispell redskin, driven from his tribe for murder, who for a day and a half served as his guide and then quit the task because of the perils which Stevens willingly endured. After scaling slippery slopes, trudging through snow that in places was five feet deep, and clambering over fallen timbers Stevens, he at last came upon the opening that was to let the railroad through the famous Marias pass where now his statue stands.

Mr. Stevens lives in New York City. The schoolhouse in West Gardiner which stands on the site of the one he attended, has been given his name.
How Stevens Found the Pass

For the stUftoflEK J92mal problems of the Boston & Maine, now happily in the way of solution, there came to Boston in an advisory capacity not only the present president of the system, Mr. Hannauer, but the famous engineer whose name probably is best known to the nation in connection with his work in the construction of the Panama canal. One story about Mr. John F. Stevens which ought to be better known is that of his discovery of the splendid pass through the Rocky mountains which gave the Great Northern railroad its chief advantage as a transcontinental route. The story is narrated in the current issue of the Stone & Webster Journal.

The existence of the pass was suspected long before its discovery in behalf of James J. Hill. It seems that an Isaac I. Stevens, apparently not connected with the family of the Panama engineer, in the fifties made extensive explorations for feasible railway locations for passage by north, south and intermediate routes to the Pacific. In September, 1853, he obtained from an Indian chief "a very particular description of the Marias Pass we were in search of." The Indians had used it, but for some superstitious reason had abandoned the route. Stevens intimated that it ought to be a valuable route for a railroad. But the civil war filled men's minds with other thoughts, and not until 38 years later was the pass actually discovered and made known to the world.

John F. Stevens explored the mountains with minute thoroughness. He said: "I know those mountains well enough to make a model of them." His exploration kept him in the mountains long after the coming of winter. Only a half-breed who was a fugitive for killing a man would go along with the engineer. He had taken sanctuary with the Blackfeet and this tribe occupied territory which Stevens would traverse. Stevens duly found the pass. He knew it must be the best location through the mountains, better than those to the south which for 80 years had been the preferred routes. It shortened the projected line of the Great Northern by 100 miles, its summit above sea level was only 5200 feet, and it provided without a tunnel a grade westbound of only 1 per cent., and eastbound of less than 2 per cent.

Stevens fared along with his companion afoot and with packs on their backs. Five miles from the top of the pass the Indian became exhausted. Stevens cleared the two feet of snow from a patch of ground and left his aide there with a fire. He pushed on alone, going far enough through the pass and down from the summit to prove that he had not been deceived "by a side canyon leading by a hidden turn back to the eastern slope."

That was the night of Dec. 11, 1889. There at the summit the lone engineer fought for his life amidst a temperature of 40 degrees below zero. He dared not sleep. Only by incessant tramping back and forth did he keep from freezing. Probably it was the splendid fibre which had been bred in Maine that enabled him to survive. On his return to his companion he found the Indian almost frozen and the fire out. He took him to a settlement in the foothills and then proceeded to Helena to make his own report of the discovery of the pass which "made" "Jim" Hill and his railroad.

At the summit of this Marias pass through the Rockies there now stands a bronze statue of heroic size, of John F. Stevens, in commemoration of the discovery of that northern gateway to the Pacific.
Dear Dr. Dinnnack,

Having back to your letter of Dec. 19/34; I am slow, I know, but give me lots of time and I generally get somewhere.

All of which means that I will mail you tomorrow—Deo Volente—a very recent photo of myself, as you requested for the library. It was taken within a week, and as Ralph Waldo Emerson said under similar circumstances—"if it does not look like me, it is the face that I shave every morning."

I was in Lewiston a short time since, but was called unexpectedly to New York to attend an important board meeting and so was unable to get to Augusta—I hope to later.

I trust that you and yours are well and happy. So I am, very much so.

My best to you and to all friends.

"Montana: The Geological Story", by Daniel E. Willard, formerly Professor of Geology, is the third in a series of geological works of popular appeal by this author. "The Story of the Prairies", (north Dakota), and "The Story of Minnesota" (the North Star State), preceded the present volume.

In an unobtrusive way Mr. Willard has done a monumental work in his trilogy, providing the lay reader with an account of the workings of geological forces in these states, with graphic portrayals of the present scene. The scientist and the layman will evidently value the new work for its comprehensiveness and factuality, while as an interpretation of the earth beneath their feet and the landscape stretching away before their eyes, the trilogy should be available to children in the three states whether such attend as pupils in a city school building or in a one-room structure in the open.

In his writings the author reveals himself as one to whom there are sermons in stones, books in the running brooks, and lyrics in buttes, benches, floodplains, volcanic ash, and anticlines; he also shows a warmly human tendency in his phrasing of geology in terms of vital relations. Thus a huge red boulder on a level plain is a "foreigner"; ice "retreats"; there is the "behavior" of streams; the earth is "the land we walk on"; geology is taken by "excursions" or "from a car window". Mr. Willard meets the lay mind more than half way, achieving a kind of scientific writing which sets forth materials with simplicity and spirit. For sheer information, and as a means of learning how to observe the earth's surface this volume on Montana is strongly commended.

My dear Mr. Dinnack,

I have two volumes, "Expedition to the Missouri" as a matter of fact, they are the diary in detail of Lewis & Clarke's expedition to the Pacific in 1804.

These volumes are unique in several ways. They contain a foreword by Thomas Jefferson—then President of the United States—which covers a sketch of the life of Meriwether Lewis, and also a copy of President Jefferson's instructions to Lewis on the eve of the departure of the expedition into the unknown wilderness.

They are in detail—exact copy of the diary of the movements and events of the expedition— as written from day to day by Capt. Lewis et al.

The volumes were prepared by Paul Allen Esq., of Philadelphia and were printed by Christie & Dubinin Bros., in 1847—119 years ago. Why they were printed in Dublin I do not know.

They are bound in what I take to be calf skin and are in every respect in as good condition as when they were made.

It is of course possible that many of these volumes are in existence in the United States, but I do not think so. I found them 35 years ago in a second hand book store & acquired them then at a cost 9c.

Now as the time cannot be far ahead when I must leave my small belongings—I want to place these volumes where they will be assured of continuous care as long as humanly possible, and I know of no better place than the official library of my dear old State, so if you ask from—I will arrange at once to shi[p them to you. Please advise.

Some time ago I ordered the publisher to send you a copy of "in Engineers Recollections"—a small booklet which I wrote last year. I am wondering if they did so & if you got it.

I am just back from a two months trip to the Canal Zone & California.

With my respects—

I hope you are enjoying your stay in Southern Pines. It must be a rather delightful place in the wintertime.

All the staff joins me in sending New Year greetings and best wishes.

Dear Dr. Dunnach:

Under separate cover, I am sending with my compliments—parcel post—a copy of "The Blazed Trail of the Old Frontier," by Agnes Bant, (who passed away some few months ago).

The recital covers the running of a special train with about 100 guests from Chicago to Glacier Park—where my statue stands.

You will find considerable about me in the last chapter.

Dear Mr. Stevens:

I was delighted to receive your letter of February 8, and this morning THE BLAZED TRAIL OF THE OLD FRONTIER has arrived.

Once more you have placed us under a very great obligation by the presentation to the library of this valuable book. Part five, dealing with your discovery of Maria's Pass, is certainly a great addition to our archives.

I notice that you have sent us a volume presented to the Southern Pines Library, and I presume they have received the Maine State Library copy. As soon as I hear from you, I will send our copy to the Southern Pines Library, or to you, as you may direct.

Our winter continues open. Here we are celebrating Lincoln's birthday, and there is really no indication of winter in Maine; rather, it is such a day as one might expect the first of April, and indeed the entire winter has been about what it is today.

I hope you are enjoying Southern Pines.

Very truly yours

Dear Dr. Dunmack,

Your letter of 12th re marking of copy of "The Blazed Trail of the Old Frontier!

I find the both copies of the book were marked for Southern Pines Library - a mark stupid blunder, due probably to a temporary (?) aberration of my massive brain.

I enclose herewith a slip with correct mark marking which please have pasted over the present incorrect one.

I am glad that you like the book - the historical references are true, Agnes Land - the author on the special train, flashed away last year.

My warm regards,

John F. Stevens
Dear Librarian,

Dr. Denman was a very great friend of mine. Thus live the Library has a number of memorials of me.

I was born in West Sandwich in 1853.

I am sending you a copy of Brochure of the ceremonies incident of the 1939 - 3rd presentation of the Hoover Medal.

My hand is crippled by Arthritis which I trust will excuse my poor penmanship.

Very Sincerely,

John F. Stevens

Dear Mr. Stevens:

Please accept our thanks for your kindness in remembering the Maine Author Collection with a copy of the Hoover Medal address, and also our congratulations upon the richly merited distinction.

Such honors reflect, we like to think, a little upon the State of Maine; and we are proud that we may claim you as a son.

Very truly yours
