Poetry.

The Lion of March.

The Lion of March is here, is here, Hear ye his roar in the howling blast How savage he seems as near and more near He comes from afar, fiercely and fast.

The Lion of March is here, is here,
Calling the spirits out of their graves,
The restless spirits of gloom and fear,
The spirit of evil that mischief craves.

The Lion of March is here, is here,
Bringing the shades of the past to life;
Fiercely the Lion grows over their dir, What are the thoughts within me rise?

The Lion of March is here, is here,
Only to tell us of days to come,
When snow and ice and winter drive, Will have passed away to their long home.

The Lion of March is here, is here,
His part to play in Nature's course; A final battle of Winter with Spring—But Spring will conquer by gentle force.

The Lion of March is here, is here,
And we know that soon the flowers will bloom; In faith we wait, as the hour draws near,
For birds to sing over the Winter's tomb.

Correspondence.

Gouldsboro', March 19, 1866.

DEAR AMERICANS:
"The spirit, (not the ardent) moves" your old correspondent to write; so seizing my "word" pen I prepare to dash off a bit of random gossip to inform you, but find myself launched upon a sea of perplexity, for want of something to say.
Byron was in want of a "hero," an uncon-mon man; and I am in want of a subject.
What to write, and how to commence—"that is the question." I thought of adopting the ancient formula at the commencement of an epistle, "I bow myself down and take my pen in hand to write you a few lines, to let you know that I am well, and I hope these few lines will find you the same," but upon second thought I discarded the conventional beginning. My "few lines" bid fair to run into many, after the style of certain long-winded sermonizers, who always have "some word more" to say.
It is rather too late to give you an account of our town election, or a list of officers—Others more well awake have probably been before me, and I shall save the names of the new-made "Fathers of the town," to big capitals starting in the face from your yearly columns. "When you have nothing to say, say nothing," is a golden maxim which I do not at present feel inclined to follow, but rather to adopt the precept which holds under certain circumstances, "say nothing, if it is not very bright." A real silence is the excellent policy which impels us when the humor for writing arises, to do up all things in pursuance of that desire, the carrying of quills and quill, and of all those typographical errors which make such queer work of many a poor author's production. Once you "sit" down, you are in the "land of no return," and you must write, or you must destroy the whole affair, and begin a new one. As to the editor's is for young writers to make under their sharp threats, and to cry (usually) to the world in general.

Do not view me with a sinister eye but pass my "impertinence" by!

But others get "some" happiness in regard to those amiable individuals, who understand so kindly to quell all ambitious aspirations on the part of new-fledged authors, and to make them "hide their diminished heads" for shame! I recollect, in my last letter, endeavoring to give a full and faithful account of a certain adventure in which a young man of my acquaintance bore an active part. Behold I find myself accused of "making the youngster out" a regular coward," because owing to a slight inconvenience on my part, I spoke of him as springing upon deck upon the discovery of the robbers. I must disclaim all intention or wish of "making" the young man in question out to be a regular, or irregular coward; and it does not appear to my unnatural comprehension to make any material difference on the point of his courage or conduct whether he springs to the deck upon that instant, or followed the robbers there; he doing what he thought best, approach to the moment for the prevention of their intended villainy. It is the reverse of pleasant to sit a silent and apparently uninterested listener, while your articles are being read aloud, and commented upon; particularly by unfriendly judges; but there is nothing like "getting used to things; and as the bird in the song says to the maiden "I must—I must be singing." So your humble correspondent—must—and must be writing; and why? Because in both cases, it is nature! "The Stormy March" seems determined to make good his claim to that poetic title, but the "long bright, sunny days" etc. of which Bryant tells us are "few and far between" after the manner of August visits. It is March; the month of snow drifts and bleak and blustering weather! When the winter bids defiance to the spring! sings our charming New England poetess. Florence Percy—only the snow drifts are minus at present, but the snow falls thick and fast to night, and we have had miniature deluges of rain in abundance, and have (almost) rivalled "Virginia" mud! Well the old month is soon to leave us, so we must try to speak a good word for it after all, for it has "joined the gentle rain," and bears the gentle name of "spring," and we can exclaim in the enthusiastic outburst of Israel's sweet singer, "The Winter is over and gone!" but there happen to be neither Thrushes, Turkeys or Ducks of the description meant in this vicinity, and we are obliged to draw upon our imagination for the possession of such delightful musical instruments as Harps and Lutes, and the I can say, with the above mentioned Flor- ence Percy, "I have an ear—aye too!" even Jewsharps notes pass current with me." I do not possess that primitive source of melody.

The Good Templars' Lodges here are flourishing; initiations are numerous; all seem interested in the good cause. "Let Temperance and her sons rejoice!" to say nothing of the daughters. This place is not particularly noted for intemperance—still there is "room for improvement"—it is every one duty to lend his example with whatever influence may be possessed to the promotion of sobriety and morality; and those who are strong, "should bear the infirmities of the weak."

Presumptions appear to be growing quite popular in this vicinity. It is "all the rage" now to join either the Freemasons or Good Templars—in some cases both; the candidates probably not thinking they can have "too much of a good thing." It is said there never was a Freemason hung, and probably the fraternity would say that none ever could deserve hanging, and if they all lived up to their professions, this might be true. Like the rest of the world, some are hypocrites, and there are many whose principles are better than their practice.

The truly "extraordinary" speech of the President, (immediately following his veto message) to the disloyal crowd, caused great excitement here, as elsewhere. Great was the rejoicing among those of questionable antecedents, while the truly loyal were dumb with sorrow; if not with amazement.
It was emphatically an unfortunate speech ill-aimed, unadvised, and unbecoming to his high position, and will not add to the honors he has gained by his great services in the Cuban cause. He evidently has not learned that if "speech is silver" silence is (sometimes) golden; and if discretion is not one of his greatest virtues, let us give him credit for honesty and real (if mistaken) patriotism, and let him be down with us, and deliver himself to the mercies of our enemies; as some more zealous than discreet would do, not considering that, to be the very result those enemies desire.
Some of the latter in the fulness of their rejoicing, hailing the President as one of themselves, agreed to give him their votes for a second term, and see him in imagination already "sitting" before his expansion of his "great" "triumph" and last thing he would think of would be to play into the hands of those Northern Dis-believers, whom all through the contest he in common with all good by all has stig-matized as worse than the hell, our own southern rebels. We have a good chance to "keep cool" let us not utterly condemn our President for that would lapse from dignity, or "slip of the tongue," but make the best of him while he occupies the Presidential office, and if he do not suit us, yet another President as soon as his term expires. If he can't always "hang on after minding" the disloyal crowd, who clamor at his heels "murder the pity!" but there is no doubt of the integrity of his intentions; whatever may be said of his conduct—and actions (says the old proverb) speak louder than words.

Good bye American, until I write again.

Miscellaneous.

The following essay was written for, and published in Harpers Magazine, some time since. The author is a native of this county. It is well worth republication:

Success in Life.

Success is generally regarded, in the opinion of the public, as the best test of a man; and there is some foundation for the opinion. But impressions greatly vary as to what constitutes true success. With the greater number it means success in business and making money. Of one we hear it said—"There goes a successful man; he has made twenty thousand dollars within the last twelve months." Of another it is said—"There you see a man who commenced life as a common laborer, but by dint of industry, perseverance and energy, he has amassed a large fortune, lives the life of a country gentleman, though he can hardly write his own name; that's what I call success." Or of another—"That is Mr.
—, the great astronomer, who was originally the son of a small farmer, and by diligent study and application he has now reached the first rank among scientific men; but they say he is very poor, and can barely make the ends meet. We suspect that most people would rather exchange places with the laborer than with the astronomer, so ready are we to estimate success and worldly position according to the money standard.

The idea instilled into the minds of most boys, from early life, is that of "making money." The parents test themselves by their own success in this respect; and they impart the same notion to their children.
"Mak siller Josk," said a Scotch laird to his son, "mak siller—honestly if you can, but mak it." The counsel, if not the same words, is that which is imparted at least by example, if not in express language to most boys. They have set before them the glory of making their fortunes. That is their "mission," and many perform it diligently leading little else but money making throughout life. Public opinion justifies them in their course—public opinion approving above all things the man who has "made his fortune." But public opinion is not always correct; and sometimes, as in this case, it is obnoxious to the sarcastic query of the French wit who once asked, "and pray, how many fools does it take to make a public?"

Yet worldly success, considered in the money aspect, is by no means a thing to be undervalued. It is a very proper object of desire, and ought to be pursued—honestly. A man's success in the accumulation of wealth, indicates that he is possessed of at least some virtues; it is true they are of the lower sort—still they are estimable. It isn't necessary that a man shall be largely gifted with intelligence, or that he shall have a benevolent disposition, to enable him to accumulate money. Let him scrape long and diligently, and he will grow rich in time. Diligence and perseverance are virtues enough for the mere money-maker. But it is possible that the gold when made, may lie very heavy indeed upon all the other virtues, and crush both mind and heart under their load.

Worldly success may, however, be pursued and achieved with the help of intelligence; and it may be used, as it ought always to be used as the means of self improvement and of enlarged benevolence. It is a noble aim to be a great merchant or manufacturer, as to be a great statesman or philosopher—provided the end is attained by noble means. A merchant or manufacturer can help on humanity as well as other men—can benefit others while he is enriching himself, and set before the world a valuable example of industry and enterprise.

Success in life is also attained through the practice of economy—an excellent virtue. But money is so often esteemed as a means of enabling us to take front seats in society, to live in better style, and to produce a glare in the faces of other people, that even many of those persons who have achieved apparent "success in life," are not particularly observant of this humble virtue. We are fond of living up to the means, and even of living beyond them. But the end comes at last; and what may have seemed success, often proves a fable.

Fortunes are made by perseverance; then it is necessary to achieve them as generally do a victory—step by step. They make a dash at success—speculate largely, and are ready to venture everything upon a cast. They regard the share and stock market as another Aladdin's Lamp—only give it a rub, and let the genii be expected to come with gold at their bidding. But undulging the speculator as often risks the wrong as the right way, and then instead of a gain, there is loss. These eager-to-be-rich people miss the mark because of their very eagerness. They have not the patience to wait, and De Mille, the wise Frenchman says, that "to know how to wait, is the great means of success."

Success in life requires the daily practice of other familiar virtues; as, for instance, punctuality, prudence, foresight, caution, and yet, also, audacity and enterprise. Let a man practice these virtues faithfully, and he will almost infallibly succeed in life—that is, he will succeed in accumulating money and rising in social position.

But what avails it all, unless the possession of the money make the man better, wiser and happier? Is not the life that has ended merely in the accumulation of a large pile of gold to all intents and purposes a failure, unless the man has been thereby somewhat elevated in the dignity of a thinking being—made fitted to enjoy life himself, and to communicate blessings to others?

And here let us say, that the success in life which is merely tested by the money standard is altogether false one. So far as the virtues go which are necessary to be practiced by a successful man of business, they are very well, and the money accumulated is also very good; but in itself it is only so much dress, unless it is used as a means of enjoyment and usefulness.
Men are making their thousands by the speculations. "I's said of one fortunate Pennsylvanian who knew just where to invest a couple of thousand, that from that small beginning in six months time he placed in his banker's hands of half a million of dollars. There was success!
He is better able to command luxuries of life, but in reality is no better man, no more deserving of admiration, no more worthy of esteem or applause because of his wealth.

The truest test of success in life is Character. Has a man built up, not a fortune, but a well disciplined well regulated character? Has he acquired no-more gold, but virtue, benevolence and wisdom? Is he distinguished not for his riches, but for his philanthropy? This is the only true test of a man.

Gold is every day becoming of less consideration in society. There are so many rich men already, and likely to be so many more richer still, that the profession of more wealth will entitle a man to no consideration of itself, unless accompanied by some other more rational claims to distinction and respect. The rulers of opinion—the men of mark in society in this day, are most of them self raised men.
They may be rich men—that is very well so far; but they are also men of moral power, of scientific skill, of enlightened judgment, and of large public spirit.

It is the personal qualities, not the accident of birth or the accumulation of gold or acres, which tell upon society at large.
Money is power it is true; but so are intelligence, public spirit, and moral virtue, powers too, and for nobler powers. The making of a fortune may enable many to enter the list of the fashionable and gentle classes, but it does no more. To be esteemed there they must possess qualities of mind, manners, or heart. There are men in cities, rich as Croesus, who have no consideration extended to them—who elicit no respect—for why? They are but money-bags. The men of weight—the successful and the useful men—are not necessarily rich men. They are men of sterling character, of probity and moral excellence.

Even the poor man, though he possess but little of this world's goods, may, in the self-consciousness of a well cultivated nature—of opportunities used, and not abused—of a life spent and improved to the best of his ability—look down, without the slightest feeling of envy, upon the man of worldly success—the man of money bags and acres.—(Harpers Magazine.)

Johnny Beede's Courtship.

BY J. W. MCLINTOCK.

At the time Maj. McIntock was in command of Fort Preble in 1841 or '2, I think, he wrote several articles for the Portland Advertiser, of a miscellaneous character, among which were the "Sleigh Ride," "Johnny Beede's Courtship," &c.; these two here mentioned excited a good deal of interest and no little merriment, and had an extensive run through the literary publications of that day. Looking over a number of Burton's "Cyclopedia of Wit and Humor," recently, I came across the latter story, appearing as original in that publication and illustrated with a full length portrait of Johnny and Sally Jones "kicking up a rumpus generally" with the chairs, tables &c. I send you the article thinking you might deem it worthy of a place in your outside, where it might be read with as much interest as if it were new.</
