WINCHESTER

MODEL 1912

Hammerless Repeating Shotgun
20 GAUGE TAKE-DOWN

This new Winchester is the lightest, strongest and handsomest repeating shotgun on the market. It weighs only 5 1/2 pounds, yet it has great strength, because its metal parts throughout are made of nickel steel. In grace of outline, and perfection of detail and finish, it is unapproached by repeating guns of other makes. It is a two-part Take Down, without loose parts, is simple to operate, and its action works with an ease and smoothness unknown in guns of other makes. See one at your dealer's.

PAST WEEK BEST OF THE SEASON

23 Deer Shipped from Mt. View,
Bringing Total Up to 70
---Those Who Were Lucky.

Mountain View, Dec. 3.
The past week which also ends the month has been one of the best of the deer season. Twenty-three were shipped, bringing the total for the month up to 70 or a grand total of 97 deer, 42 bears, besides many birds, and when one takes into consideration that this region is very little advertised as a hunting section, the above report is an excellent showing for one little station. The following are the favored ones for the week:

Carl Burroughs, Rumford	1 buck
C. H. Moore, Auburn	2 does
T. M. Thurston, Lewiston	1 buck
Thomas McRay, Portland	1 doe
Ray Thurston, Frye	1 doe
H. R. Porter, Portland	1 buck

H. E. Robertson, Lewiston	1 doe
H. E. Robertson	1 buck
C. A. Roberts, Buckfield	1 buck
J. P. Tooth, Rumford	1 buck
J. McGregor, Rumford	1 buck

A number of local nimrods have reduced the high cost of living the past week by taking a day off "goin' huntin'".

"Times were never better in Canada than at the present, which accounts for the scarcity of lumbermen all through the States and as heretofore we have depended on a lot of men from over the border and have always been able to secure all we needed. When it comes a time like this we are all at sea running around from place to place looking for help, 'like a cat in a strange garret,' looking for some way to get down besides the stairs. We have had to send to large cities, Portland and Boston, and take whatever men we find out of employment and endeavor to make 'lumber-jacks' of them. 'But it is the d—l's own job,' said a jobber last week as he stood on the station platform, waiting for the train to come in with some men he had hired in Massachusetts.

SOME BEAR!

W. F. Walker of North Newry recently shot a bear that weighed 324 pounds. He received for the meat, skin and including the $5 bounty, $52.22.

PATTEN MAN IN LIFE SAVING ROLE

Invents a Gun Lock Guard and Gives It to the People.

Believing that human life is more valuable than dollars and cents, G. W. Cooper of Patten, has given to the people his invention, designed to prevent the accidental discharge of firearms, refusing to take advantage of the patent laws for his own gain if it will be of service in saving hunters and others who handle firearms from accident or death. He cites two cases this season when such a device would have saved the lives of Maine hunters. In a diagram drawn by the inventor the mechanism of a rifle is shown, and behind the trigger there is a steel block which prevents the trigger from being pulled back and cocked when the lever, which forms the trigger guard, is pulled down. When the lever is up in place a pin releases the block and allows the trigger to be pulled back.

KILLED A BIG BEAR AT 80.

Mariaville, Nov. 30.—Elias P. Meservey, one of the last of the old time bear hunters, celebrated his 80th birthday this week by a trip to Aurora and killing a big black bear which has been terrorizing the neighborhood and killing sheep and calves all the fall.

The bear ranged among the farms on the edge of the forests and although many of the modern steel bear traps were set for him, he avoided some and got out of others. The bear had been shot at scores of times, but although hit several times, none of the hunters could "get" him.

Elias rigged up an old-fashioned "dead fall" an arrangement of logs which falls upon the bear and breaks his back, pinning him between two big logs.

Elias says that the secret of catching bears is the bait. And for bait there's nothing like a smoked ham. So after the "dead fall" was built, a fine smoked ham was hung up just inside in such a way that the bear could not reach it without springing the trap.

The bear was caught the first night. Elias hasn't kept very careful account, but thinks that he has killed nearly 300 bears in his lifetime. He doesn't hunt much of late years except now and then when he is called to relieve a community of a pest, as he was at Aurora.

All he asks for pay is the bear. The pelt, oil and a few choice cuts of bear meat, is enough for his trouble, he says.

BROUGHT DOWN FOUR DEER.

Joseph Brown and His Son Return From Hunting Trip in Maine.

Joseph Brown, of the firm of Roussseau & Brown, druggists, and his son, Frederic S. Brown, aged 14, arrived at Woonsocket at 1 o'clock this morning, having been in the Maine woods since Nov. 6. They met with unusual success. Mr. Brown came out of the woods with one 10-point and one 8-point buck deer and his son with a 7-point buck and doe. The aggregate weight of the four animals was 600 pounds.

A COUPLE OF HAPPY HUNTERS.

In addition to the heavy gun work Mr. Brown and his son shot a large number of partridges and rabbits. During the last part of their stay in the woods they hunted over ground covered with eight and a half inches of snow. Yesterday morning on the way out of the woods with two guides and the game they rode 13 miles in a sleigh to the nearest railroad point.

Mr. Brown's camp was three miles from Eustis, Me. He left Woonsocket with his son on the morning of Nov. 6, going to Boston, and from there to Portland and Farmington. After leaving Farmington a part of the journey was over a narrow gauge railway, the rails of which were only two feet apart. The camp is about 20 miles from the Rangeley lakes and 15 miles from the Canadian line. —Woonsocket Evening Call, Nov. 22.

Blaine S. Viles of Augusta, a member of the commission of Inland Fisheries and Game, is authority for the statement that the fish and game laws of the state are altogether too bulky and that an effort will be made at the next session of the legislature to reduce the size of the volume.

WONDERFUL NEW CANADIAN COUNTRY BEING DEVELOPED

Mountain Region and Prairie Section of Western Alberta to Be Mecca for Sportsmen and Tourists.

(Special to Maine Woods).

Edmonton, Alta., Nov. 30.—Where the Athabasca, Fraser, Saskatchewan and Columbia rivers, swift and relentless, surge through the divides of the Rockies, their sun-kissed snow-caps glittering by day and frowning under shadows by night, is the wonderful land of the Canadian west. The everlasting peaks, grim recorders of the countless centuries before the coming of man, stand as guardians of the silent, mysterious region to which Simon Fraser raced Lewis and Clark across the continent for the domination of the empire of the Pacific.

For years, with the exception of a few pioneers and trappers and sportsmen seeking adventure, the region was as unknown as in the days when Fraser lay storm-bound on the shoulder of Tete Juan Pass, spending the winter which Lewis and Clark employed in crossing the Rockies further south and pushing into the Oregon country. When old Simon finally broke camp the pathfinders had already wrested the domination of a half continent from him the mystery and glory of a western night, perchance tells him of those truths which, long forgotten, are brought home to him and emphasized with subtle force. The spirit of the everlasting hills permeates this whole country, presaging well for the virility and aspirations of those future people who will inhabit these lands.

There is an irresistible appeal in the solitude of the mountain country of western Alberta. This is also true of the open prairie with its background of timber. To some the prairie has a lonesome aspect—it seems too great, too vast, too endless—when it stretches away to the sky line in all directions, but there is a measure of relief in the false impression of open sea at the horizon. In the mountain country the tiny stream, thirsting to gratify new ambitions, soon grows out of all knowledge of the snow-clad forested giant that gave it birth, and, speedily unrecognizable in the swift river far away, disappears in the shadows of a distant gorge, before losing itself in one of the numerous lakes.

The Yellowhead Pass, which penetrates the Canadian Rockies, begins 190 miles west of Edmonton. The "Pass" has been known for centuries. It was used by the Indians long before the Hudson's Bay Trading company made it a thoroughfare. The highest peak is Mount Robson, which rises 13,700 feet, with a three-faced pyramid at the crest. The summits of all the mountains are bold and rugged. Their bases are clothed with evergreen trees. Above the timber line, which is distinctly marked in every direction, the mighty giants are stark naked, but fleecy clouds shield their modesty of eternal snow and ice.

Entrance to Pass is Wide.

The entrance to the "Pass" is wide and level, set with picturesque lakes and dashing rivers. Many have tried their pens in describing their beauties, but the written word has failed; artists have essayed to transfer its indescribable charms to canvas, but with indifferent success. The superlative, after all, is only the superlative. The world traveler gasps and is silent, for nowhere has nature so condensed her wonders and run riot with such utter abandon; the novitiate breaks into a rhapsody that falls flat and silence soon becomes the sign of his appreciation. There is probably no other spot where the Creator of all things has carved and hewn with such unrestrained fancy and scattered jewels with such lavishness.

The Athabasca river is a turbulent stream, which is met in the mountains by the Miette, a river of less character, but partaking of the spirit of the peaks. It dashes along without regard for anything—swelling with a sense of its own power and washing away embankments and trestles. The icy waters of these streams come from the green-tinged glaciers. There are several glaciers in the mountains; but the only one in sight is sixty miles distant.

The geological survey of the Dominion of Canada, following in the footsteps of H. B. Round of Edmonton, who discovered the value of the coal wealth in the Jasper Park district, reports there are numerous deposits of building stone and materials for making cement and bricks, and no end of timber and other undeveloped resources. The department estimates that more than 38,000,000 tons of commercial coal, is already in sight. This is important from an economic standpoint, as most of the seams can be opened from the hillsides. Deposits of mica have been discovered on Mica mountain, and it is reported there are outcroppings of iron, copper, galena and gold, but so far no organized attempt has been made to wrest these riches from their treasure vaults. However, the mountain sides are now being searched by prospectors, and their camp fires may be seen glimmering as stars when the sun drops behind the western hills.

Seas of Golden Grain.

North and east and south of Edmonton, capital of the province and most northerly city of the 60,000-class on the American continent, are veritable seas of golden grain, with dairy farms and truck gardens and cattle ranches. A hundred and seventeen years ago Edmonton, then known as Fort des Prairies, was second in importance of the Hudson's Bay company's posts in the wide northwest. ST. ANTHONY'S COTTAGE.

Phillips, Nov. 28.—Thanksgiving day! A I look from my window I can see the snow in all directions for the stuff some folks call "beautiful snow" has come to stay with us for some six months, more or less, way down in this part of the State of Maine.

The sleigh bells make merry music, and as I write I hear them jingle, as many parties are out for a sleigh ride.

Everyone is thankful today. I am thankful for friends. God bless you all. We should not let the memories of the happy past, when with many loved ones that have "crossed over the silent river" we gathered around the Thanksgiving table, cast shadows, over this day, but be glad we can help cheer the lonely, the sick and the dear old people.

It is my good pleasure to be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hough at the Elmwood for dinner today, and again I say "God bless my friends"

"There are no songs as sweet as the old songs,
No friends as dear as the old friends."

"Uncle Sam" surely takes great care to keep us in remembrance and the beautiful cards that come to me from different states with good wishes for this day, are like so many jewels on the chain of friendship.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred B. Dale write from their winter home in Florida that the orange crop was never better and we wish oranges could be mailed. Mr. Dale writes they are delighted to learn by Maine Woods, Messrs. Brennan and Green are to be at Mingo and add: "They know how to run a hotel and we shall be with them when the ice goes out." Several have written, "Is there any snow at Phillips?" and if they could see the path I shoveled through from my door to the sidewalk Monday morning, believe me, they would ask, "How could so much snow, almost a foot, fall in one night."

A long letter from Upper Dam tells me, among other interesting things, that since Messrs. S. H. Palmer of Milford, Penn., and J. C. Dougherty, on Sept. 30 reeled in a record fish from the pool, there have been seventy-three guests arrive. One party was Walter H. Sawyer and 20 friends on their way to Azcoos, where they went to look over that wonderful dam and the big lake made in that region, all the work done under Mr. Sawyer's supervision.

Camp Midway was open for a week's hunting. The following Lewiston gentlemen were there: Messrs. Thomas White, Edward Webster, Linwood Durgin and Albert Julian. The big buck Mr. Durgin shot has quite a story that goes with it. The party had tramped for miles through the forest, no doubt making noise enough to warn all the deer within a mile of their coming. At noon they met for lunch and were sitting on the ground eating, when they heard a sound in the bushes close by, and looking up, there stood the huge buck looking at them. Mr. Durgin grasped his rifle and the first shot the deer dropped, the only one killed by the party.

There have been a number of parties out to the camp at Richardson pond. Hon. H. Otto Wittpen, mayor of Jersey City, N. J., and friends, Dr. O. R. Blanchard and Geo. B. Tennant of the same city, and they had three fine deer to tie the red tag onto, and give venison dinners to their New Jersey friends.

BURYING GROUND FOR BELOVED DOGS

Poets Worked Overtime on Verses for Headstones for the Canines.

Nestling amid the hills and valleys of eastern Westchester County, N. Y., near the village of Hartsdale, is one of the very few burying grounds for pet dogs. Here lie the forms of proud blue-ribbon winners, devoted companions of high and low degree, dogs with long pedigrees and others who had no pedigree at all, but were ardently loved.

Tender, heart-born tributes are engraved on slabs of stone, and the memory of dumb but fond and faithful friends is kept verdant with fresh flowers. Pathetic symbols of human grief prevail. Even poetry has been employed to mutely voice sorrow in marble and granite words.

Affection for a departed pet and grief over its death were so intense in one instance that the owner in his extremity went so far as to suggest the probability of a dog heaven, and canine immortality. This bizarre suggestion is contained in these stanzas on a headstone:

BABY.

Her little life is over,
And we, who are now left behind,
Wonder, perchance, if we shall meet again!

And if there may not be set a place apart

For dim, uncertain souls like hers,
Who know not wherefore they thus live and die.

To one who sees the love in eyes of such,
So loving, patient, intermixed with wonderment,
Cannot believe but what a soul looks out,
Though weak indeed it is as yet.

We know that nothing is for naught,

Even the love that such as these have given,
(Which truer ofttimes is than man's for man).

And so it seems to me but just—
Love and justice being of all words most strong—

That timid, half-awakened souls like these
Are given a chance sometime, somewhere to know

The reason, and to what end, they suffer, live and die.

And as they live under the law—as do all things—

By love we rise; and although blind to all the eye holds dear,

Blind to the summer glory over all the land,

To flowers and trees and to the sun shining upon the faces that were loved,

Deaf to the sound of raindrops falling in the breeze,

Or voices calling:
The Great To-Be for such a one will bring Back all that was—and more.

and A. F. Brenner of Boston are now at Richardson Pond for a two weeks' stay. Dr. Wister of Philadelphia, who with his family, passed the summer at Upper Dam is there for a Thanksgiving hunt.

The big six, eight and ten pound trout and salmon are having a great time in the pool, and no fear of a fishhook with a lot of gay feathers being offered them.

Mrs. Chas Grant this week started for an extended visit with friends in Maine and New Hampshire. The family are all back at Upper Dam and the days are busy ones.

The water in Mooselookmeguntic Lake is the highest it has been for many years, as they are letting no water through the dam on account of holding it at Middle Dam while the new dam is being built in the pond-in-the-river and this keeps the lake open later than usual, but no fear of a good thick ice crop later in the season.

A pleasant winter to all our friends at the Dams as well as in the city folks.

The Iowa City (Iowa) High School Team, winner of the 1912 Inter Scholastic Championship won a still more important victory in the Annual Match for the Astor Cup. Eighteen teams were entered; the Iowa City organization not only won the cup, but established a new record

980 out of a possible 1000

This is 8 points above the best previous Inter-Scholastic score 972 made by the Iowa City Team, and 7 points higher than the best score in the 1912 Inter-Collegiate matches.

The scores made by these boys are unprecedented in the history of rifle shooting, and demonstrate what can be done by a combination of marksmanship, good coaching and PERFECT AMMUNITION.

BUCKS FOUGHT UNTIL ONE DIED

Ed West Tells Story of a Thrilling
Duel Between Two Deer
Fought In the Moon-Lit
Forest.

"How those deer fought. They gowelled each other with their horns, backed back and rammed head on and kept at it until one of them dropped dead."

It is Ed West, engineer on the Rangeley division of the baby road and nature story teller de luxe who is speaking. "Ed" for he is always known as "Ed," had just lighted his pipe after his run in from Rangeley the other morning when the story of the duel in the woods that he witnessed between two big buck deer, commenced to ooze out of his system. When Ed tells a story of this kind he always speaks softly. On this particular occasion he was nearly whispering when the yarn was completed. But why keep the reader longer in suspense. On with the story, Edward.

"I had been hunting all day and it was just at night that I heard strange sounds coming from a little clearing in a spruce thicket," explained Ed.

"At first I couldn't make out what the matter was, but I determined to find out. You see I have had some experience in hunting bob cats, so that it is no trick for me to creep onto game unobserved.

"Hardly had I glanced into that thicket before I saw a sight that would hardly come to a man once in a life time, no matter how much of a hunter he had been. The moon was just beginning to rise, so that the spectacle was made more impressive.

Deer Were Fighting.

"Nearly in the center of the clearing were two giant buck deer engaged in a combat that it was easy to see was to be to the death. In the further corner of the thicket were two spectators. They were a small buck and a doe. The doe was shivering visibly.

"It was apparent to me at once that the two deer fighting in the clearing under the light of the moon were about evenly matched. They were both large and powerful, armed with heavy and sharp pointed horns, terrible weapons for a contest of this kind.

"For a long time they battled their sides heaving and blood flowing in such quantities that the snow was red all about them. Their heads and sides were gashed with long cuts. It was evident that both of the bucks were fast weakening from loss of blood.

Finally the buck that was fighting on the side nearest me seemed to make a gain. He backed back and made a run, butting the other head on, and knocking him down. Then he gored him something frightful, but only for a moment, for the buck managed to spring to his feet, resuming the fight with undaunted courage. But his days were numbered, for he could not keep up the pace and was soon down again. This time he did not rise. He had dropped in his tracks.

"Just as soon as that happened the little buck took the cue and started pell mell, while the conquering hero trotted off with the little doe."

For a few moments Ed sucked at his pipe reflectively as he thought sadly of the fate of the big buck that died in the forest duel. But with undaunted courage Ed picked up the train of thought again and said:

Another Deer Story.

"I wonder if you have ever heard of the deer that was shot by John Petrie of Rangeley one day recently? No? Well, it was a 200 pounder that had nine points. I think this deer was the king pin deer of the woods, for when Petrie dressed the buck he found a large piece of an antler imbedded in the buck's side. It had been there for a long time. But he had another surprise coming, for when he got as far as the neck he found a change of buck shot. Both the wounds were all healed over and there was nothing on the surface to indicate that such a thing had happened."

Again Ed smoked and thought. It was far from train time so he had ample opportunity to tell hunting stories.

"T. L. Flagg of Redington shot a deer the other day," he went on "that had an antler broken off and imbedded in its side. Now that deer may have been the one that won in the duel I was telling you about. It was a good big buck and had other marks of combat on its body as well."

HUNTING ACCIDENTS.

There has been an improvement in this state in recent years in the number of men that are shot by being mistaken for a deer during the hunting season, but the number is still too large and will be so long as there is one. The accident is one that never ought to happen and can never happen if hunters would observe ordinary precautions. But the trouble is that they won't or don't anyhow, and if any legislation could be devised to make them more careful, it goes without saying that it would meet with approval.

An eastern Maine man who has lived close to the game region and men of whose town have been killed almost every year by being mistaken for a deer, suggests that the legislature pass a law providing that only deer may be shot who have a year's growth of antlers. This would certainly serve to make hunters more careful, for if it were illegal to shoot deer without antlers the hunter would be likely to be surer what he was firing at and so less likely to mistake a man for a deer. Of course such a law would exclude doe and fawn and it might meet with opposition on this account but there isn't much question but that a law to protect the female and young of the deer will have to come before very long anyhow.

Hunters and woodsmen do not always agree whether deer are diminishing in this state but it is a fact that the number killed each year is decreasing, which would seem to indicate that if they are not fewer they are being driven back into the less accessible sections of the state, which amounts to pretty much the same thing. If this is to continue then it is certain that the game must be better protected and this protection cannot be given any too soon.

From the standpoint of the protection of human life and the conservation of the game there would seem to be enough in this proposition to make it at least worthy of consideration. The great number of fatal hunting accidents in this state does not contrast very favorably with the Adirondacks where the season has just closed with

With all due respect to our learned brother we wish to rise and say that there have been but few hunting accidents in Maine this year. Three, only, if memory serves correctly. Red hats and red coats are doing their work as well as the laws of recent enactment. Come to Maine and be safe!

SAVE THE MOOSE

Chairman Wilson of the Fish and Game Commission is in favor of a close time of three years or more on bull moose. It is very probable that a bill will be presented at the next legislature to this effect.

Maine Woods thoroughly believes in such protection. A number of our correspondents have called our attention to the going of these kings of the Maine forests and have suggested better protection. There are many out of the state hunters who do not care for bird or deer hunting who would be very glad to come to Maine if they could feel reasonably sure of securing a moose. Maine Woods would like to have expressions of opinions regarding the protection of moose, from its readers.

Let the good work of protection go on!

SHOT DEER AT 90 YARDS.

Bert Kempton of West Phillips Takes a Running Shot at Big Buck and Brings it to Earth.

Friends of Bert Kempton of West Phillips are congratulating him on the long and successful shot he made at a 200 pound buck one day recently.

Mr. Kempton was hunting in No. 6 and got into what he believes must have been a deer yard. There were three deer. They ran in all directions, when Mr. Kempton cut loose at a big buck that was hiping along fully 90 yards away. Just one shot was needed to do the trick and the deer fell after running five rods. It was an eight point head and one of the best specimens secured in that section of the country this year.

BETTER LICENSE LOCAL HUNTERS

So Claims a Connecticut Sportsman in Writing of the Game Situation in Maine.

To the Editor of Maine Woods:

Naugatuck, Conn., Dec. 2.—In your paper I notice there is some talk of a new fishing law to license non-residents. That is a good suggestion, but don't make the same mistake that was made in the game laws some years ago when the $15. fee was charged to non-residents, and hunters are allowed to go into the woods from Portland, Bangor and other cities of the state and bag game without taking out any license at all. Some fee should be charged these hunters as well as the others who come from out of the State. I don't know what proportion of the hunters in the woods are residents, but have followed the reports of shipments this fall as you gave them and am surprised at the few deer taken by the out of the state hunters. In your last issue you report in one day 76 deer through Bangor and should judge about 70 per cent. of the shipments are made by residents. In the same issue of the 60 over the Sandy River road, 70 per cent. appear to have been killed by hunters from your own state and of the Mountain View shipments, over 90 per cent seem to be Maine residents. This percentage may or may not hold good during the entire season but must prove that the state should receive some license fee from these hunters or the time will come when there will be no attraction for the sport from out of the state. Why should a party made up in Portland, for instance, be entitled to go up in Aroostook county and hunt without a license while the party from Boston is obliged to pay fifteen dollars for the privilege? The Boston sport don't complain about the charge and I do not believe the one from the other city would stop going if he had to pay a fee of say five dollars. Then too, it might eliminate the undesirable hunter to some extent, besides giving more license money and better game protection.

Perhaps I am not qualified to offer suggestions on the subject, but even if I did not visit your state this fall, I have written a minute description of my anatomy on your license applications so many times it would be hard for me to do anything illegal in your state and "get away with the goods."

Now about the moose. How much longer are you going to wait before you put a close time on them, for five or ten years? Why not preserve the few that are left? According to reports, very few of the number killed this fall had heads worth setting up. There can't be many left and they should be left for a few years before it is too late. In all my hunting in various parts of the state I never saw but one bull, in open season, with a head that would clear the law. Others may have been more fortunate but think mine is about the average experience of a sport who spends ten days, or two weeks in the woods each fall. Of course it is up to your citizens to make the laws to cover specific cases. We non-residents, who are "on the outside looking in," can only refer to apparent evils as we see them, in the hope that they may be corrected for the good of all. We have no selfish motive and only hope to see laws made to preserve the game so that twenty years from now, if we are alive, we will still be counting on our annual trip to the Maine woods. Non-Resident.

LAST MOOSE OF SEASON SHIPPED

At Least Eastern Maine Hunters Think So—Bangor Game Notes.

Bangor, Dec. 5.—Another moose was added to the list of eastern and northern Maine game shipments Wednesday, and 42 deer were counted in the express cars by the wardens. The moose, shot by F. A. Hager, was put off at Dover. It was probably the last moose to be legitimately killed in Maine this year. Continued trust in the woods makes hunting difficult, and a little snow would not come amiss. SPORTING NOTES

Here is an opportunity to remember with a post card or letter that famous veteran of the reins, John Pickens of Lewiston, for Mr. Pickens will celebrate his 88th birthday December 14. Mr. Pickens' address is Dryden, although he lives in Wilton. Many of the older residents of Franklin county remember the skillful driving of Mr. Pickens at the time he was handling the ribbons over the four horses of the Phillips and Farmington stage. He was as famous, in fact, as some of the coachmen who were the kings of the road in England many years ago. Mr. Pickens had many experiences of great interest at the time he was driving stage one of the most famous events being the great bear hunt in the Devil's Elbow in South Strong that finally wound up by the killing of a dog.

There is a Bangor travelling man who comes to Phillips now and then in the interests of a lace house he represents. This year he had planned, being a bachelor, to spend Thanksgiving in Phillips. But Wednesday night he got a letter from his 94 year old mother. When he made out the cramped and shaky writing, the letter said: "Dear Will, I want you to come home for Thanksgiving. Mother." That was all, but it was enough to cause the jolly old bachelor to take the sunrise limited the next morning for the Queen City of the East, where a very dear old lady awaited him. What did it matter if he had to make a return trip to Phillips to see his customer? He had pleased his mother, anyway.

HOUSE CAT THAT CHARMED A SNAKE

Reptile Made Attack on Setting Hen--Then "Old Pete" Came to Her Rescue.

Casteel, Ark., Nov. 20—One of the largest snakes ever killed in this section of the country was killed a few days ago by A. F. Bodenhofer of this place. It was a black snake and measured 8 feet 11-2 inches in length, and was as large around the middle of the body as the calf of a grown man's leg. It put up a hard fight until charmed by a house cat, when it was easily dispatched.

The snake was killed under very unusual conditions. About 10 o'clock in the morning Mr. Bodenhofer's attention was attracted to his chicken yard by the unusual cackling and scared crys of his barnyard fowls. They were running about the yard beating their wings on the ground and uttering frightened crys. Mr. Bodenhofer called the attention of his wife to their unusual actions and they watched them some time before he started to investigate. Going out into the chicken yard he saw nothing unusual and started to leave when his attention was called to the inside of the chicken house by the angry clucking of a setting hen. He peered hastily through an open chinking in the building and in the dim light saw an enormous black snake on the board on which the box nest with the setting hen sat. The snake would warily poke its head toward the hen and endeavor to crowd her off the nest, so he could get the eggs. Each time the head of the reptile came within striking distance old biddy would let fly at him with her sharp beak and drive him back. Failing by these tactics the snake became more aggressive, reared its head high and began to strike at her savagely. The hen valiantly defended her unhatched brood, meeting every attack with a flank movement of her beak. The fight waxed warm between hen and snake for some minutes, but finally the hen, seeing that she was getting the worst of it, and had more than she could handle, gave a frightened cackle of defeat and flew off the nest, leaving the snake victorious with the spoils of the battle at his disposal.

The unusual size of the reptile appeared rather uncanny to Mr. Bodenhofer and he was loath to attack it. He is the local photographer of the neighborhood, and being a rather ardent follower of his chosen profession it flashed across his mind at this stage of the game that the snake would make rather a unique picture on account of its size, if he could photograph it alive. The interior of the chicken house was too dark to make a successful exposure and he was in a quandary as to what to do, to carry out his desire.

He was afraid that if he left for his camera, which was in the house that the snake would get away while he was gone. To kill the snake and then take the picture would take away the real value of the negative. His only alternative was to get the snake out in the open and close enough to the house so he could make a quick dash to the house for his machine, and get back before it got out of sight. This he quickly decided to do. Taking down a hoe hanging on the chicken yard fence he advanced cautiously through the chicken house door. During the interval the snake had been taking advantage of the victory and had started in on the eggs. One was already stuck in his throat and he was in the act of swallowing another. Interrupted in his hen-fruit repat the snake slid out from the nest to the ground floor of the house and headed for the only hole in the house except the door. Mr. Bodenhofer became active when he saw his quarry escaping and raked him away from the hole with the hoe. Around and around the interior of the house they went, the man trying to get the crook of the hoe and the blade hooked over the snake's body, and the snake trying desperately to get away. After a few minutes of this rather unstrategic work, the snake finding himself cornered became the aggressor. Crawling a few feet and straightening out, he would suddenly stop and coil and raise himself full two-thirds of his length, his head reared as high as the man's head and strike at him. Every time he made one of these manoeuvres Mr. Bodenhofer would run for the door. Then a happy idea crossed his mind. The next time the snake stopped and started to rise Mr. Bodenhofer waited until he had straightened up, then he caught the very end of the hoe handle and at arm's length threw the blade and crook of the hoe around the stiffened, upright body of the reptile, and started on a run through the door towards the front yard, dragging the twisting, squirming monster with him.

His wife, seeing him coming running through the yard with the snake from the kitchen and not knowing the circumstances which prompted the race, screamed and slammed the kitchen door, very badly frightened.

Old Pete the gray and white house cat, was sitting on the jamb of the door when it was slammed to hastily and shut, and was thrown rudely and bodily down the kitchen steps and onto the ground. Old Pete picked himself up, looking rather "fussed," just as Mr. Bodenhofer untangled the snake from the hoe and dropped it in an open space about 20 feet from the house and ran for his camera in the front room. Old Pete's attention was attracted to the snake and he started over to investigate. Old Pete had seen and caught smaller ones, but this was extraordinary. Slowly and stealthily, with cat-like cautiousness, he approached until he was about two feet from the black monster. The snake, seeing a new enemy, coiled in a fashion to meet a new attack, then he stopped. So did Pete. There was something intensely fascinating in Pete's piercing green eyes; something terrible and yet soothing to the big snake. There was something in the beady bright eyes of the snake that held Peter spellbound. Pete shivered. He had never felt that way before. The snake's head slowly raised a few inches from the ground and began to move rhythmically from side to side. Pete's tail also rose and followed the sinuous, rhythmical movements of the diamond shaped head.

Mr. Bodenhofer by this time had located his camera to the front room and came running with it, expecting to see the snake disappearing through the panels of the fence. The unusual spectacle which met his gaze was so unlooked for that he, like the cat and the snake, was held spellbound for a few seconds. His professional spirit broke the spell. What an ideal and perfectly natural pose. Hastily, but carefully, he advanced on the silent pair. The snake's head lowered to the ground, but the piercing eyes never left the cat. The cat's tail dropped, but the piercing glance never failed. Mr. Bodenhofer set his tripod, focused, but in his plate-holder and pressed the bulb. He carried his camera back to the house and returned. There was still no change in the attitude of the reptile and the cat.

The hoe lying on the ground suggested the end of the tableau, and taking up this weapon that he had used with such good results in the last encounter, he again advanced on the snake. Old Pete held him spellbound. Mr. Bodenhofer struck. The first lick broke the big snake's back. With the sharp edge of the hoe he then chopped off its head. Old Pete stood calmly by and watched the execution, then slowly walked off to a sunny place on the porch, licked his paws and washed his face.

SAW MOOSE FAMILY.

Old Town Man, While on Hunting Trip, Has Unique Experience

Walter N. Hellenbrand and Daniel E. Cummings, of Old Town, who have been for several days in the woods bordering on Sunkhaxe stream looking for big game, are home after a most enjoyable outing. They stopped at the King cottage and found game fairly abundant, even for that region of big and little game animals. During a hunt in the burnt land, Mr. Hellenbrand enjoyed the best near view of a family of moose that was ever his lot to capture. He was sitting on the bald top of a rise, when into his range of vision and not far away, came a cow and calf moose, which paid no attention whatever to him, but continued to feed and move about with utter fearlessness; although the hunter sat in full view and so near that he must have been seen many times from his elevated position and around to the other side of the wind, when the animals caught his scent and were immediately off like the wind, the cow watching anxiously out for possible trouble and the calf sticking close to its parent.

The water in Moosehead lake is nearly as high as it was last spring which is an unusual condition for this season of the year. Monday night's rain extended as far north as the lake and raised the pitch of water several inches. There is still sleighing in Greenville, but the roads are very icy, the rain having washed off practically all the snow.

POCKET MONEY
FROM TRAPPING

Two Young Men of the Staff of Maine Woods Make Good
as Amateur Trappers.

What a couple of country boys can do towards picking up some pocket money with a line of traps has been demonstrated this fall by the experiences of Elbert Matthews and Mont Bean of the mechanical staff of Maine Woods.

Messrs. Matthews and Bean got busy in good season and put out quite a lengthy line of traps. They work each day in this office with presses, type and gasoline engines, but after supper they shoulder their gun and pack and start over the trap line.

Mont and Elbert believe they have captured the only two mink in this part of the Sandy river. They were both prime animals and were taken fairly early in the season. Then other water animals have managed to get in to the traps of the Bean-Matthews combination.

The other day a fur buyer happened along and purchased the fur that the young men had trapped at odd times. It figured up to nearly $20, which is sufficient in this part of the country to buy quite a lot of tobacco and pay admission to a number of moving picture shows.

"We had a lot of fun out of it, too," said Mont.

"Yes, we had a lot of fun out of it" echoed Elbert. "Say, but 'aint that a fine skunk skin!"

GETS BIG BUCK
AFTER LONG HIKE

While many of the deer hunters who have gone into the Maine woods from Portland this year have secured their game, the first crack out of the box, E. W. Kingsbury earned his 200 pound buck which he brought from the famous York camps at Loon Lake in the Rangeley region for it was only five days tedious trailing through the deep snow that he shot his game.

Mr. Kingsbury made his first deer hunting trip this year. He was 10 days in the big woods, and for the first few days hunted around the camp. Although deer tracks were as plentiful as cows in a

MOST HUMAN OF BIRDS.

It is not only in imitating human speech that the parrot excels most of the birds. The parrot is alone among birds in taking food in its claws. With these two characteristics it makes more or less use of that which distinguishes humanity from the rest of the animal kingdom—the hand and the larynx.

The monkey uses its hands and the elephant its trunk in feeding. Various animals have a habit of pawing their food. Rodents have serviceable toes. Still, the parrot is pre-eminent among birds in this regard. The secretary bird is said to attack reptiles with its claws, and some observers have said that owls make partial use of their remarkable flexible perching toe somewhat more than does a hen in scratching for food. However, there is no other bird which, when given a piece of food, will accept it in its claws.

THE LUCK OF A MAINE HUNTING PARTY.

booked. Plots are not sold, only interments being made, but it is planned to form an association of those who have buried pets, so that the cemetery may be accurately surveyed and concessions issued.

While most of the departed pets are in specially prepared boxes of varnish deal-wood, lined with zinc and hermetically sealed, children's caskets are used occasionally. Some of these are lined with plush and white silk and contain pillows of flowers. Valuable collars are often interred with dogs. Some bodies are embalmed by veterinarians.

Evidence that dead pets are not forgotten is found in the fact that mourners visit graves and decorate them with flowers and garlands.

Photographs of dogs, under glass, are placed in depressions in the faces of headstones. One slab with such a portrait, shown in an illustration bears this epitaph:

OUR SYDNEY
Died Sept. 4, 1902
Aged 16 Years
Born a Dog
Lived Like a Gentleman
Died Beloved.

Odd names of dogs are visible. For instance: "Our Boozer, died June 23, 1911, faithful friend of E. P. and S. W. Cassidy," and "In memory of our pet, Rags, 15 years and 3 months old, died July 25, 1910," also "Our dear little fox terrier, Dame Trot, died July 29, 1906, faithful and loving unto the end."

Superlative regard is indicated in such inscriptions as: "Bobbie, best loved friend of Mme. H. Farenholtz," and "Mignon, dearest and best beloved friend of Ada Van Tassel Bilington."

Although it may be a bit late to tell the story to readers of the Maine Woods it may interest many of them to know that our well known correspondent, "Fly Rod" decorated her house in Phillips village and burned much red fire at the time of the Democratic torch light parade. Miss Crosby gave as her excuse for such a demonstration her joy over the non election of Roosevelt. It is quite evident that she is not a Bull Moose.

barnyard, yet it was hunters' luck that Kingsbury didn't catch sight of one although with his guides he plodded many hours and many miles through the thick cedar swamps.

Finally the guides, the famous Gile brothers decided to make Spotte Mountain five miles away the hunting headquarters. The party were several days in camp on the mountain before they finally met with success. They had been trailing a big buck's tracks for some time when all of a sudden Kingsbury saw the animal in the woods about 100 yards away. The buck was partially concealed by a little clump of trees. The hunter who carried a big nine pound 42-86 fired and the deer jumped into an open space a few yards further on. The first shot missed as it afterwards turned out. His first attack of "buck fever" over, Kingsbury took better aim this time and the big bullet went crashing through the buck's shoulder and he dropped without a jump.

Clarence Gile who was in the lead of the party had been watching a little clearing in hopes of seeing a deer cross, and hadn't seen the buck at which Kingsbury fired, but the shot wheeled him sharply. He was ready to shoot, but it wasn't necessary, for the nine pounder did the work.

There is good money in getting and selling furs nowadays and many a boy on Sagadahoc county farms is putting considerable money in his purse by trapping this fall. Skunk skins which used to sell as low as 30 cents now bring from $1.25 up as high as $4 while coon skins bring from $3 to $4 according to their condition and used to sell for $1. One Bowdoinham boy has secured over 100 skunk skins so far this season, says the Bath Times.

Why advertise whiskey in a religious publication? In other words, why use a medium that does not appeal to the class of people you cater to? If you want to reach the sportsmen, guides and trappers place your advertisement in Maine Woods. Then you will be in the right atmosphere.

Camps, above Madrid, with Percy V. Rose, Oliver N. Rose and Charles Wight, all of Greene. They never fail to bring home their limit of game, but this issue of Maine Woods will doubtless be out before that happy result is obtained.

All the members of the Rose party have gone into the woods armed with 32 Winchester Specials, which they say are great game guns.

Parrots, of course, do not talk, as we use the word, in their wild state and are not known to be imitative of neighboring sounds nor to possess the repertory of the mocking bird. It is therefore a question whether or not their use of the claws is largely imitative also. The shape of the parrot's beak would indicate that some assistance in eating has always been a part of the birds' characteristics.

Like man the parrot makes its appearance in the world naked and helpless.—Harper's weekly.

WONDERFUL NEW CANADIAN COUNTRY BEING DEVELOPED.

(Continued from Page 2.) cost of $1,500,000 was built in 1795. At that time there was great rivalry between the Hudson's Bay people and the Northwest Fur company, which built a post called Fort Augustus in 1788.

The two companies were merged in 1823, when Edmonton House became the central post. A stockade, defended by cannon, surrounded the storehouses and residences of the factors and other officials and some of the employees, while on the outside were the cabins of traders, hunters and trappers and the huts and tents of half-breeds and Cree Indians. The Blackfoot Indians, across the border, in what is now the United States, came here twice a year to trade with the factors. However, they would not permit the representatives of the company, which was organized 242 years ago as the honorable governor and company of gentlemen adventurers of England, to enter their territory.

The Indians of the dreaded Blackfoot confederacy frequently met their hereditary foes, the Crees, and several encounters, with heavy losses in dead and wounded took place along the banks of the Saskatchewan river, also on the present site of Edmonton and suburbs. To see the city today with its immense business and office buildings, beautiful homes, vegetable gardens, miles of paved streets and boulevards, street cars and automobiles and other evidences of civilization one would scarcely believe that this was not so long ago the stamping ground of painted savages and factors who enforced the law of the land at the point of a gun.

The Oregon Trail.

Expeditions, which transported furs and returned with merchandise by way of the Saskatchewan river from Winnipeg and Lake Superior, were outfitted at Edmonton House, and from this point also the Oregon trail started. Deputations from Astoria, near the mouth of the Columbia on the Oregon coast of the Pacific ocean, would come up this noble river, bringing merchandise and meet deputations from Edmonton with fur at a lake, known as "the Committee's Punch Bowl," near the confluence of the Whirlpool and Wood rivers. There they made their exchanges. The old trail is well known today and is used by automobiles and freighters.

North of Edmonton is the vast Peace River district and the great hinterland containing scores of lakes and streams, undeveloped deposits of minerals and a wilderness of forests and millions of acres of agricultural and grazing lands. Several trading companies, including the Hudson's Bay, Revillon Freres and the Northern, maintain posts in the district and carry on profitable business with furs. Saw and flour mills are operated in connection with the posts and river and lake boats, pack horses and car roles (dog-teams) bring in the supplies.

The Canadian Northern has built a steam railroad to Athabasca, 100 miles north of Edmonton, and has a line projected to Grouard, at the head of Lesser Slave Lake, and thence to the Peace River Landing. The Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia railway is building a line from Edmonton to Fort St. John and thence to a point on the Pacific and other companies have plans to establish communication between Hudson's Bay and the Pacific ocean by way of Edmonton. The last named, known as the Alberta, Peace River & Eastern, will be the shortest transcontinental system in America, being 1,450 miles in length, as compared with from 3,400 to 3,800 miles occupied by existing roads. Grouard is now a town of 1,000 and is growing rapidly.

The government of Alberta and the railroads are taking advantage of the scenic beauties in central and northern Alberta and several public playgrounds will be developed and made the show places of western Canada. The Jasper National park, within six hours' ride of Edmonton, and the old Edmonton-Athabasca trail, which has been improved to a point where an automobile can cover the hundred miles in less than three hours, will be features of importance in the "See America First" movement, which is sweeping over the continent and it is predicted they will attract their quota of tourists and travelers from all parts of the world.

FEWER MOOSE ARE SHOT THIS YEAR.

Bangor, Dec. 1.—In the open season that closed Saturday night only 68 moose were received at Bangor from the hunting regions of northern and eastern Maine, compared with 104 at the corresponding date last year, and nearly all of the specimens inspected here have been undersized, few of them carrying horns. The result of the season's shooting seems to be about the claim frequently made that Maine's moose are rapidly decreasing in numbers, and it is probable that the Legislature will be asked to declare a close time on bulls for several years. Cow moose, which are protected at all times, are numerous.

The deer season has yet two weeks to run, and with the receipts at Bangor to date of 2637, as compared with 2522 at the corresponding date in 1911, it looks as if the total kill would at least equal that of last year.

DEATH TOLL OF HUNTING SEASON

Maine Has Been Very Free From Fatalities the Past Year-- 35 Shot by Others.

Maine has been very free from hunting accidents the past year, three fatalities only being recorded. Michigan takes the lead in hunting accidents and fatalities, 26 persons having been killed and 18 injured.

The hunting season, that closed as a general rule throughout the United States November 30, was not as deadly as that of 1911. When the count up was made this year it was found that the dead and injured numbered 91 and 53 respectively, as against 100 and 37 respectively for 1911. 1910 was the deadliest year on record, with a list of 113 people.

BEAR SHOT AT ELM RIDGE.

is appalling, 26 persons having been killed and 18 injured. The heavy casualty list undoubtedly is due to the great number of hunters that entered the woods in that State. Nearly 5000 licenses were issued by the Michigan game wardens.

A glance at the causes of the accidents is interesting. The following statistics show how they happened:

Killed—Shot by companions, 35; shot themselves, 30; mistaken for deer, 11; shot by unknown hunters, 7. Injured—Shot by companions, 29; shot themselves, 12; shot by unknown hunters, 8.

In Vermont the hunting season does not make any impression on the deer. The law allows only bucks to be shot and the result is there is danger of the animals becoming a pest to the farmers. An effort will be made to change the law so as to allow both sexes to be hunted.

Massachusetts—Warren Holden of Jackman, a guide of 20 years' experience, mistaken for a deer and shot by companion; Walter Murch, Franklin, shot by companion; Fred N. Spencer, Monson, shot in the head by unknown hunter while chasing a deer.

Massachusetts—Joseph Yardy, Woburn, shot by companion who did not know gun was loaded; Alden Soule, Sandisfield, Conn., mistaken for a deer and shot by companion.

Vermont—Henry Gilmore, Lyndonville, shot by companion, who mistook him for a fox; Charles Somers, Arlington, neck broken by fall while deer-hunting. Injured—Russell Allen, Barre, shot by companion; Paul Preston, Montpelier, shot by companion as latter fell; Fred C. Richmond, Woodstock, shot at deer from buggy, horse jumped and threw him out, breaking a leg and an arm.

love to drink:
And from its pool a treasured knowledge sip—
Of calmness pure upon that silver brink.

Who would not love despair to leave behind
Where many ills their preying forms are seen—

To rest where lives the calm and nurtured wind,
And sunny sweetness gilds the blessed green.

Then waken heart, thou soother of all woes

And where broad fields their silent reaches give

Fullness to my glad cup and where soft blows,

The murmuring breeze, there, there would I best live.

O then have done with idle, wasted dreams

Have done with worryment and all this sordid gain;

Leave far behind the mart where only teens

Sorrow and suffering and hunger's gnawing pain.

Far from the bitter cries of children
wan

Far from the doorstep of the cold lamented poor;

To give my life for them and Truth's
engloried dawn

Out where no false hand beckons in sodden lure!

Better for me the golden sun on high

Better the new-born morning and
its quiet dawn;

The blessed field and the o'er-roofing sky

To name my home beneath its tender blue!
