The Empty Cradle.

We met John on the stairs. He was carrying an old cradle to be stowed away among what was termed 'plunder' in the lumber room. One rocker was gone, and the wicker work of the sides broken, it was an old willowy affair, but we could not refrain from easting a sad look into its emyty depths. 'Gone!' we said dreamily, 'All gone!' What golden heads were pillowed here, heads on which the curls grew moist in slumber, and the cheeks and lips flushed to the hue of the rose. When sleep broke, the silken fringed lips opened heavily from the slumberous eyes; smiles flitted like sunbeams over the face; the white fist was thrust into the mouth, and when the silken is the silken in the sunbeams over the face; the white fist was thrust into the mouth, and when mamma lifted the muslin and peeped to see if the baby was sleeping, cooing and crowing were heard. The little feet began to kick, out of pure delight, and kicking out till both of the tiny red shoes were landed at the foot of the cradle. Where are those hands now? Some that were em-browned by vigorous manhood are sleeping on the battle-fields, some are bleached with time, and cares; and they have grown sore and weary on the rough paths of lite. Perhaps some little one, once tenderly rocked here, is sleeping in the coffin. Over it grows heart-case, and vigorous box and white candy tuft, and the starry jasmine. The ascertained debt of the U.S. on the first day of April, 1865, as entered upon the books of the Treasury Department, amounted to $2,366,955.07. Eour months later, on the first of August, 1865, the debt represented upon the books amounted to $2,757.689.571; and the latter sum has sum has been assumed to have been the maximum debt of the country at any one time.

But such was very far from being the fact. These figures represent only the amount of debt actually entered upon the books of the Treasury Department, but there existed at that time a liability for a very large sun, not then entered, but for which the Government was bound as much as if the bonds had been issued—a liability since recognized and since paid.

Limp and languid after the convention excitement, I became the victim of a buco ie suffasion, and went down the Illinois Central railroad 40 miles to see how a prairie farm was managed. It was only a small one, 1200 acres in extent, and six miles around it, and worth but $60,000 with its building; but it was a fair specimen of its class and their life. From catre, the whole farm could be surveyed. and with a powerful glass the laborers over looked at their work any part of it. Corn, wheat, flax, potatoes, great broad single fields of 50, 100 or 200 acres. My host had, too, a fine apple orchard of several hundred trees, that last year yielded large crop of very superior fruit. But he despised chickens and eggs and batter-it was cheaper to buy them-and milked but a single cow. Much of his grain and grass he turned into horses, cattle and hogs; and his nearness to Chicago, the great live stock market, not only in the west but the coun try-give him excellent facilities both in buying and selling. He was a little pinched, just now, by the loss of a lot of 700 or 800 Texas cattle a year or more ago by distemper-a matter of $30.000 or so- but that was a rare accident

The farm was good for $10,000 a year from its crops, and without any risks but the weather and the markets. Machinery is used here in farming to an extent and on a scale quite unknown in New England and New York farming. Twenty acres of corn were being planted a day by three men, with a fourth man and a pair of horses to mark the rows. In gathering the hav, the mowing machines sweep down the grass from sunrise to noon, and without having to turn it or leave it out a single night, the same afternoon's horse rakes and mammoth horse forks house or stack the same all fitly cured. 'Why is it thus!' when we in New England coddle our grass three or four days, with an even chance of a week, and damaging rains, before we dare honse it. Are the western dews so much lighter and the prairie suns so much more drying! Or do we dry our grass unnecessarily much? Labor is plenty and reasonably cheap; ordinary farm hands were hired last season for $15 a month and board: this year for $20. They are chiefly Germans; the Irish are not in favor, and are rarely seen. Chicago is the great labor market for all the Northwest .-Samuel Bowles in Springfield Repub-
