

ANECDOTES OF LINCOLN.

You have heard many stories about the good Abraham Lincoln, who became the president of his country. And not only that. He gained a nation's love and veneration by the nobility of

It is interesting to learn how he first came to read and write and how he first utilized these accomplishments.

In his home there were but three books—the Bible, the catechism and a spelling book. So greatly did he grieve over his dear mother's death that his father at great trouble secured him a volume of Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," which he read and reread, hardly taking time to eat or sleep.

Then there moved into that remote Indiana clearing a young man who could write. This young man offered to teach Abe. The eager boy could hardly wait. He made rapid improvement and was presently covering every possible surface with letters which he traced with a bit of chalk or a charred stick. In less than a year he could write a letter.

And he did write one.

He wrote it to the clergyman they had known in Kentucky. He asked mon over the grave of his mother, as there had only been a prayer at the time of her burial.

In answer came the minister; also people to hear him from miles around.

This established little Abe as a letter writer. His father was very proud of his attainments. After this he became the neighborhood letter writer. Old men who perhaps had written before their hands had become shaky utilized his talents. So did younger ones.

And the same hand that wrote these childish letters, after many long, struggling pen "freed a whole race for all time to come."

Lincoln and the Book.

Abraham Lincoln when a boy of thirteen or fourteen years of age, hearing that a neighbor named Crawford owned Ramsay's "Life of Washington," borrowed the book to read. He had nearly finished the perusal when an accident occurred, which caused him much regret. On retiring to bed one stormy evening he placed the book directly under a candle in their log cabin, and, the wind changing before

His disarray was great on discovering his badly damaged condition - he had agreed to be recompensed to take care of it and rearrange it safely - and he felt that his reputation would be lowered, although he had not actually been to blame. But he had resolved to take it back to the owner at the close of his day's work and offer to make what repair he could, though he had no money to give. The heavy cart and was well received by the neighbor, who proposed that if he should work out the whole cost of it.

Lincoln's Politeness.
No doubt you boys have all read the story of the time when Lincoln, walking with a friend, met a negro who lifted his hat to the two men. Lincoln lifted his hat in turn to the negro.

"Why did you do that?" asked Lincoln's friend the president.

"Because," was the reply, "I cannot afford to be less polite than a negro."

Now, can we boys, whether we're white or black, afford to be less polite than a hero?

Boy's Thought of Lincoln.
 Some days in school when teacher says,
 "Jim, name the presidents," I up and commence
 And say them all from Washington clear through to the Buckskins; then I have to stop and clear my throat. I always ways have to when
 I come to Abraham Lincoln's name
 C'en though the teacher whispers:
 "Shame!"
 "Can't you remember, Jim?"
 "Can't I remember him?"
 Why, he's my hero! That is why
 I get choked up and want to cry.
 Once he was just as poor as I
 And homely, too, and tall and shy,
 And he was just like me in his place.
 Climbed to the top and freed a race.

The Swallow Family.
Before the country was densely populated the swallows used to make their homes in caves or in niches of rocks or hollow trees, but now they trustfully build their nests close to barns and houses, usually nesting under the eaves or even inside the buildings. Their nest is composed of layers of mud about an inch thick, plentifully mixed with straw and lined with feathers. They usually rear two broods in a season, the first in May four to six in number, white, with red and purple spots and splashes nearly covering the larger end. When the second brood of young are capable of using their wings the swallows congregate in flocks of thousands and migrate southward, traveling by daylight instead of at night, as is the custom of most migratory birds. The swallow is an attractive bird, with long wings and a forked tail. Its small, flat, triangular beak is also characteristic.

"Goodness! How awful! And to think that we rich people can do nothing for those unfortunate sufferers!"—Cleveland Leader.

HOMEMAKERS' COLUMN.

Correspondence on topics of interest to the ladies is solicited. Address: Editor HOMEMAKERS' COLUMN, Oxford Democrat, South Paris, Me.

The Poem in Prose.
The housewife, tired of the busy grind, turned loose some thoughts that were in her mind, when her husband came from his toil at night; she said the world didn't use her right. "I'm always doing the same old chores, I'm always sweeping the same old floors, I'm always washing the same old clothes, and darning holes in the same old socks. I'm sick and tired of this wretched life! There is no joy for a poor man's wife!"

The wife of the rich man sighed and said: "Gee whiz! A dame might as well be dead. I'm always doing my social chores, I'm always wearing by stately bodes; I'm always motoring through the town! I'm always doing the same old things! I wish I had ten-foot wings! I'd fly away to some lowly cot, and do a stint with a coffee-pot. We all grow tired of the work we do, and sigh and rant till the air is blue. But it does no good, and it bales no hay, and the wise man chases such thoughts away. The world improves with each passing year, because each man in his little sphere takes off his jacket and grins and sings, and keeps on doing the same old things." WALT MASOON.

Parents and the Schools.
I was graduated from a State normal school, with the intention of being a teacher, but later took up another profession and really never taught school. After I was married and children began to come, I anticipated their school days long years ahead. I was so proud that, owing to my superior knowledge in practical school work, I would be able to help their studies. But I had reckoned without my host!

I could hardly believe my ears when my oldest son first said, "Mother, don't do it that way at all now, Mother, but I was wide enough awake to realize that while I had been busy studying 'hygienic clothing and feeding of children,' pedagogy had been making rapid strides ahead, and I must now go again into the schools and study their present methods if ever hoped to guide my children properly in their study."

My graduation thesis was "The Co-operation of Parent with the Teacher." I had to laugh now when I think of my telling a class of fifty-eight what should be done along this line, and I not eighteen years old.

There is one thing my dear father did in our school days which at the time seemed almost cruel to me, but which I saw the wisdom of as I grew older, and resolved to follow if I ever had any children of my own. No matter what complaint or trouble we brought home from school, my father always sided with the teacher, and I was well as well as my children in almost every instance. Children are very apt to look upon things in a one-sided way, and are continually thinking themselves imposed upon at home as well as in the school room.

Often these little troubles may be laughed off if we go about it in the right way, and again a little reasoning will have the desired effect, while as a last resort I have found the mere mention of talking it over with my father will almost always bring the desired, "Oh, never mind," which means it wasn't so much after all.

We must never fail, however, to show our children that we are deeply interested in all their little school troubles, but we must try to lighten their troubles by persuading the children that it is only a misunderstanding all around.

A few words at breakfast and the child is gone, with a hurried kiss and sometimes a lunch box. At noon if we are lucky we have another hurried meal and another good-bye, while after school in the afternoon the plays for each season and the demand for third-order exercise keep him away till the third meal, when we really just begin to have some comfort and companionship with our child. Three short hours at the very most, and with a fervent "God, bless you!" we tuck him into bed, while our teacher has been with him from five to six full hours.

Our children are not all cherubs, though we heartily believe them so. A teacher's problem is a grave and nerve-racking one.—EX.

Hints.
In cooking French fried potatoes it does not take so long, and they are a prettier brown, and do not absorb the fat, if you remove them all when partly done from the kettle and reheat, then replace the potatoes and in a very few minutes they are done to a golden brown.

Abandoned Farm For Sale!
Located one and one-half miles from Buckfield village, known as the Drake farm, contains about 130 acres suitably divided into tillage, pasture and woodland. Small orchard, 25 good apple trees; fifty to seventy-five thousand pine ready to cut and lots growing pine left; good barn 40x50 with split stone cellar under whole. House needs some repairs, but can be made comfortable with small outlay. High ground, excellent view of whole village. R. F. D. and telephone. Lowest price for all $1,000, or will sell buildings and 14 acre field for $500. I will sell the pine on the stump for $7.00 per ft. on hand.
