NEW ENGLAND CLOTHING HOUSE

Maine's great statesman, James G. Blaine, as Chauncey M. Depew recalls, was on the occasion of one of his visits to England before he had even been a candidate for the Presidency, the guest of honor at a dinner given by the then Prince of Wales, afterward King Edward. The one disagreeable man at the dinner was a duke of the royal house who had a reputation for lack of tact. During a lull in conversation he blurted out: "The greatest outrage in history was the revolt of your people against King George III. There was no justification for it then, and there is no excuse for it now." The prince, according to Mr. Depew, was plainly embarrassed. The one man who had the tactfulness to carry off the situation was Mr. Blaine who, in a carefully-modulated voice, replied: "Perhaps it George III. had possessed as much diplomacy as his great-grandson America might still be English." The Prince of Wales, after the subject was passed, gripped Blaine's hands with a twinkle of admiration.—Bath Times.

In writing of "Women and the Customs House" in the June Century Lillie Hamilton French makes the suggestion that, since the $100 limit has not proved a full protection to the government, a larger limit might be allowed "to those of us who have no intent to defraud the merchant." A limit of $300 or even $500, she argues, would in no way deflect the rich, while it would be an enormous boon to women of limited means.

"Story of a Tariff" is the title of a document of 16 pages, just issued by the American Protective Tariff League of New York, which will undoubtedly prove of value, not only during the Congressional campaign, but for the use of speakers, writers, etc., for years to come. This document or book includes speeches of President Taft, quotations and statistical matter from the speeches of over 150 Senators and Representatives in Congress delivered on the Tariff during the Special session of the 61st Congress.

Chats on Books.

Winston Churchill, it is reported in a London newspaper, has left the English metropolis on his return to America with a new novel in prospect. "One nailers if the two Winston Churchills Fraquet," remarks the London Journal.

Co. and Moore has a new novel, "Craig Alton," Archibald Conesable & Scottish stories. The "Laird of the Lake" is a new novel in prospect. "One nailers if the two Winston Churchills Fraquet," remarks the London Journal.

Early next month who has found many & Co. will publish "Shakespeare."

romance of modern Little Brown & Sienkiewicz, in which "Whirlpools," a list analyzes the humor by Henryk his manner in "Children great novel and "Without Dams" and sold after the historical style of his "The Soul" and "With Fire and Sword."

A booklet in aid of the Paul Valdes' once Dunbar Scholarship Fund, preparation by the commissioners, treasurer of whom is Davis W. Clark, 31 West Cedar street, Boston. It will contain photographs of the poet, his mother, his monument, an unpublished poem in facsimile, a sketch, addresses at dedication of monument, autograph, facsimile letter of William Dean Howells, and the proceeds will go to help the establishment of the proposed scholarship for talented Negroes.

No one planning a vacation should fail to study the pages of Suburban Life for June, which is the annual vacation number of that wide-awake magazine. Both from a pictorial viewpoint and from the matter of practical information this number is an exceptional one. Some of the special vacation features are as follows: "A Day with the Summer Boarder" (Illustrations by R. R. Sallows); "Vacation Days" (Verse), by E. Irving Farrington; "My Vacation—How Shall I Spend It," by Arthur L. Blessing; "As to Vacation Clothes," by H. H. Johnson; "Camp Conveniences," by E. C. Downes.

In the early days of novel and play writing the choice of names for fictitious characters was comparatively simple. It cannot have cost Fielding much effort of the imagination to christen "Squire Allworthy" and "Jonathan Wild." Of course there is more reality about such names as "Don Juan" and "Joseph Andrews"; but who in these days would venture to call the hero of a novel simply John Smith?

The names of Dickens are full of meaning, if a trifle grotesque; and Stevenson, more subtle than his predecessors in this as in much else, re-named still further upon the matter. No one can say, for instance, just why the names of "Dr. Jekyll" and "Mr. Hyde" exactly fit, yet no one can help feeling that they do. Since his time, it has been felt that a name should convey an exact shade of meaning.

Several aspects of the poet's life and character are viewed by Richard Edgecombe in his "Byron: The Last Phase," and among them the extent to which he revealed himself in his work. Lady Byron has said that almost every incident in Byron's poems was drawn from his own personal experiences, and he himself went so far as to say, in a letter to John Murray written in 1821, that "almost all 'Don Juan' is real life, either my own or from people I know."

If we search the poems we shall find clearly set before us no small number of mysterious incidents in his life. In the "fugitive pieces" we obtain glimpses of his school days and his friendships in the "Hours of Idleness" we are introduced to Mary Chaworth and elsewhere in "Child Harold," "The Giaour," "The Bride of Abydos," "The Corsair," "Lara," "Manfred," and "The Dream," may be discovered easily discernible episodes from his erratic career. And of course the poems to his half-sister Augusta are too well known to need mention.

The persistence of poetry, despite the insignificance of the material reward offered to even the most successful poets, is a thing which may make the aspiring poet take heart again, says a writer in the Dial. The amount of verse, and good verse, now being published in England is by no means small; and the amount seeking publication is many times larger. Stephen Gwynn, writing in the Nineteenth Century, compares the present age with the period immediately succeeding Shakespeare's death; both alike showing a great variety of style and a delightful poetry. He makes a study of two recent poets, James Stephens and W. H. Davies, and maintains that good verse, however limited its sale, has a far better chance of being remembered—of achieving immortality, we might say—than any prose writing of corresponding excellence. The novel, the book of essays, the history, the biography, please most at the moment, and seldom do they receive a second; but the poem gives increasing pleasure the oftener it is read.

YOUR FAVORITE POEM

Old-fashioned poetry, but choicely good.—Lucas Walton.

Somebody's Darling

Into a ward of the whitewashed walls,
Where the dead and dying lay,
Wounded by bayonets, shells and balls,
Somebody's darling was borne one day.

Somebody's darling, so young and brave,
Wearing yet on his pale, sweet face
Scars to be healed by the hands of grace,
The lingering light of his boyhood's grace.

Matted and damp are the curls of gold,
Kissing the snow of that fair young brow;
Pale are the lips of delicate mold,
Somebody's darling is dying now.

Back from his beautiful, his smiling brow
Brush all the wandering waves of gold,
Cross his hands on his bosom now,
Somebody's darling is still alive.

Kiss him once for somebody's sake;
Murmur a prayer soft and low;
Kiss him once from the lips of grace,
They were somebody's pride, you know.

Somebody's hand hath rested there;
Was it a mother's soft and true?
Somebody wept when he marched away,
And have the lips of a sister fair?

God knows best. He was somebody's love?
Somebody's heart enshrined him there;
Somebody waited his name at the door,
Night and morn on the wings of prayer;

Somebody wept when he marched away,
Looking so handsome, brave and grand;
Somebody's kiss on his forehead lay,
Somebody clung to his parting hand.

Somebody's waiting and watching for him,
Yearning to hold him again to her heart;
And there he lies, with his blue eyes dim,
And the smiling childlike lips apart.

Tenderly bury the fair young dead,
Passing to drop on his grave a tear;
Carve on the wooden slab at his head,
"Somebody's darling slumbers here."

Mrs. E. G. Sprague.

Baptist Choral Association Furnished One, and Miss Carpenter the Other—A Successful Concert.

The 20th concert of the First Baptist Choral Association was given in the auditorium of that church Wednesday evening before a large audience that showed keen appreciation of every number on the lengthy program.

Mrs. Ada Mills, director, has every reason to feel very proud of the fine showing made by the chorus, which is not only a distinct credit to the church, but so ably serves, but to the city as a musical organization. It was down on the program for four numbers, all of which furnished the audience with something new to admire about the well balanced group of singers.

Miss Dorothy Carpenter, the reader, had a pleasing list of selections and was very clever in the character impersonations involved. The local soloists were three in number: A. Fred Sherman, who handled a difficult selection in a manner that won praise from his friends; Miss Elsie Hayden, whose sweet voice was heard in a well rendered double number; and Harold Greene, whose selection from "Aida" again stamped him as a singer of much talent.

The male quartet and ladies' double quartet interspersed the program with selections that contained much melody, skillfully handled. Miss Faith Greenhalgh, as organist, and Miss Alice Fiske as pianist, added delightfully to the concert, both in their diet and in their work as accompanists at which they are exceptionally talented.

EDWARD VII., LATE KING OF ENGLAND

Character Study of the Distinguished Sovereign Who Was Europe's First Diplomat and Head of the Greatest Empire in History of the World.

By JAMES A. EDGERTON.

EDWARD VII. was the chief trait of King Edward VII. was tact. He was the master of form, of fashion, of etiquette. He was an embodiment of that much misused word "gentleman," an incarnation of the conventional and the correct. He was high priest of the gospel of civility. With him courtesy was a fine art and usage was the highest authority. While his life knew many scandals, they were so decorous that they were forgiven. He was the gentleman even in his vices. As Prince of Wales his role was a difficult one—difficult in the sense that, while he was next to the throne and often called upon to represent the throne, yet he must never overstep the bounds and assume any of the prerogatives of the crown. The universal testimony is that he was a perfect in the role. As king he showed another aspect of the same quality. He was his own foreign minister, the first diplomat of Europe. Here he was in a larger field of form, the etiquette of nations. It was the one field which by habit and training he was best fitted to fill. His nice observation of the proprieties extended to internal affairs. While he was king in fact as well as name, he never went beyond the close limits that free England had set about his office. To put it in a word, he never made a mistake. Despite his punctilious regard for the formalities, it is said that the late king's volunteer bodyguard. It was the conviction that Edward was "a good bloke" which was felt not only throughout Great Britain and her colonies, but in practically all lands, that gave him his hold on the heart of the world. His efforts to end the Boer war and his magnanimous treatment of the burghers, his friendship for peace and diplomatic alliances with other European nations looking to a prevention of war, his aloofness from factionalism and party, his personal leaning toward democracy, also toward advancement and humanitarian measures, his kindly attitude to Ireland and furtherance of liberal concessions in her behalf, his gentlemanly and considerate bearing, his exploits as a hunter of big game, his success as a farmer and raiser of prize stock, his popularity among the tenants on his estates, his social qualities and reputation as a good fellow and sportsman, his model qualities as a husband and father, his common sense and tactful deportment, the universal good will left him as a legacy by his mother—all these, coupled with the fact that he was head of the greatest empire in history, combined to give Edward VII. an enviable place in the world's esteem.

The World's First Gentleman.

He was not a great man perhaps, not a genius in any sense of the word. Not a mighty captain, not a reformer or a leader of new departures, but an king personally disliked the fuss and feathers. If so he managed to conceal the fact most effectually. He probably had more fuss and feathers than any other man on earth, except the kaiser. If he did not enjoy that sort of thing he was both a great martyr and a great actor. It does seem rather amusing that modern up to date nations rig out their kings in plumes and glitter and ribbons like a schoolgirl or a butler, but perhaps it is no more amusing than the fact that they have kings at all. Maybe the two things go together and are in keeping. But it is not surprising that the gorge of a full grown man should rise at it. So if Edward did not like fuss and feathers the fact is much to his credit.

His Genial Popularity.

Another thing is to be said in his favor. Aside from his office, he was popular as a man. This was true when he was Prince of Wales and true when he was king. It was frequently stated that if Great Britain were a republic and plain Albert Edward Wettin offered himself as an independent candidate for the presidency he would have been elected by an immense majority. An amusing thing touching illustration of his general popularity comes to mind. An Australian gentleman was once in London and, observing a carriage with two mounted policemen in front, asked his own bus driver as to what personage was inside the closed carriage.

"What? He?" was the reply. "Don't ever know? That's 'is most grushus!" "What? The king?" "Yuss; that's 'im, right enough."

Surprise was expressed that the escort was so small. How were these two policemen to protect the king in case of a row? The driver laughed.

"Why, 'oo's gold? to 'urt 'im, mister? There ain't no one in London 'ud touch a 'air of 'is 'ead. 'I's a good bloke, 'e is."

This expressed the feeling of the man in the street, who in the case of danger would have been his sovereign's volunteer bodyguard.

Edward VII. was born in Buckingham Palace Nov. 9, 1841. "Is it a boy?" asked the Duke of Wellington of the nurse. "It's a prince, your grace," answered the indignant woman. It was a distinction that would be appreciated by a toady. The world is thankful for the fact that it was a boy as well as a prince and that he grew up to be a man as well as a king.

In the home circle the future king was called Bertie. He showed no startling originality either in youth or afterward. In all his long life he said nothing that the world considered worth quoting or remembering. While he had titles, offices and distinctions by the score, the only things he ever actually achieved by his own efforts were the winning of the Derby and the many prizes he took for blooded stock reared on his estate at Sandringham. Measured from the intellectual side, his life was sufficiently common.

Answer This Question

When shown positive and reliable proof that a certain remedy had cured numerous cases of female ills, wouldn't any sensible woman conclude that the same remedy would also benefit her if suffering with the same trouble?

Here are two letters which prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Fitchville, Ohio.—"My daughter was all run down, suffered from pains in her side, head and limbs, and could walk but a short distance at a time. She came very near having nervous prostration, had begun to cough a good deal, and seemed melancholy by spells. She tried two doctors but got little help. Since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, Blood Purifier and Liver Pills she has improved so much that she feels and looks like another girl."—Mrs. C. Cole, Fitchville, Ohio.

Irishburg, Vermont.—"I feel it my duty to say a few words in praise of your medicine. When I began taking it I had been very sick with kidney and bladder troubles and nervous prostration. I am now taking the sixth bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and find myself greatly improved. My friends who call to see me have noticed a great change."—Mrs. A. H. Sanborn, Irishburg, Vermont.

We will pay a handsome reward to any person who will prove to us that these letters are not genuine and truthful—or that either of these women were paid in any way for their testimonials, or that the letters are published without their permission, or that the original letter from each did not come to us entirely unsolicited.

What more proof can any one ask?

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

place. Yet he was finely educated, had the most distinguished private tutors and finished his university course at Oxford.

He spoke several languages with ease and in his day was perhaps the best royal linguist in Europe. The gift of many tongues is a social accomplishment, and in anything that pertained to social life he was at home.

The first really important event in Edward's life was his visit to the United States and Canada in 1893.

While in Washington he stayed with President Buchanan at the White House. On a visit to Mount Vernon he planted a chestnut tree by the side of the grave of Washington, the man who had whipped the prince's royal ancestor, George III.

Edward did not care much for King George, however, since he was inordinately fond of Thackeray, who lashed the four Georges with a whip as cutting as that of Junius. It is not on record that this trip to the United States had anything to do with Queen Victoria's friendship for the north during the civil war, yet it is by no means impossible that her mind was unconsciously influenced by talks with her eldest son and prospective successor. The very fact that he had been here and knew the situation at first hand would cause her to seek light from him. Americans may therefore owe the dead king more than they know.

Loyal to His Friends.

One of the most admirable traits of the king was his loyalty to his friends. It mattered not what fate overtook them, his hand was open to them still. There is the well known case of the officer in the Boer war who came home practically disgraced, but who found no change in his former cronies and then royal master. As Prince of Wales Edward had no access to state secrets, but this was more than made up to him by his freedom to form friendships with leading men all over Europe. One of the strangest and closest of these associations was with Gambetta, the republican leader of France. It was one of the most conspicuous intimacies of the prince's life but was by no means the only indication of his liberal tendencies.

There must have been a peculiar charm about the person and manners of this king that gave him such sustained popularity throughout life, a popularity that enabled him to set the fashions for the English speaking world. So universal was the liking for him that even the scandals blazoned abroad were unable to shake it. Today about all the world remembers of the most notorious one of these episodes is the phrase coined concerning his efforts to protect the name of a woman, "He perjured himself like a gentleman."

Another charming trait of his character was his loyalty to his mother. Before his accession he uniformly forbade the drinking of his health standing, remarking that he was only a subject. He went often to the theater, but refused to have his coming or going noticed or announced. He also insisted on paying for his boxes and ordered that if he were late the play should not wait for him. The same thoughtfulness for others was shown in other ways. Lord Savile, who often entertained the king, was once asked about his royal guest.

"My dear sir," he replied, "you would never know that he is other than an ordinary guest. He has the utmost consideration for every one down to the servants, and nothing annoys him more than to think he has put any one out of the way. He falls in with any suggestions made for his entertainment, and I have in my time had many guests who occasioned me considerably more trouble."

His Marriage a Love Match.

The marriage of the Prince of Wales to Alexandra of Denmark was due to a love match. One of the incidents still remembered was the presentation of a ring to the bride, the setting of which was made of precious stones whose initial letters spelled his home name, "Bertie". They were a beryl, an emerald, a ruby, a turquoise, a jacinth and a second emerald. In his public treatment of his wife and sons the king always showed the same nice observation of the proprieties and conventions that marked all the other affairs of his life.

That this courtesy was natural and not assumed is revealed by an old story of a fire and a reporter. The Prince of Wales one day went to a dinner with the Duke of Sutherland. Wanting to know the details, he asked them of a newspaper man. At the end of the interview he handed the scribe a cigar. Tearing a sheet out of his notebook, the reporter carefully wrapped this up and put it in his pocket. "Don't you smoke?" asked the prince. "Oh, yes, your royal highness," answered the reporter, "but I am not likely ever to get another cigar from the Prince of Wales." The prince laughed and, once more producing his cigar case, said, "You had better have another one—this time to smoke."

King Edward was about five feet eight inches tall and weighed in the neighborhood of 200 pounds. He was not especially devoted to athletics or exercise, but did more or less hunting and spent as much time as possible on his farm at Sandringham. He was an inveterate smoker, was fond of mid-night dinners and liked the pleasures and comforts of life.

In the field of statesmanship his most conspicuous activity was in the line of composing difficulties. He was ever patching up quarrels among his friends and after he came to the throne enlarged his pacific efforts to the courts of Europe. In future, therefore, he will probably be best remembered as the peacemaker.

THOMASTON WOMAN CHOSEN
Edith A. Lenfest Elected Grand Matron of Eastern Star--Goldenrod Has Banner Chapter.

The 18th annual session of the Grand Chapter, O. E. S., was held in Portland this week, and once more chose a Knox county woman to guide its affairs. Edith A. Lenfest of Thomaston being elected grand matron. She has served as assistant matron the past year, and is well qualified to keep the Chapter in its present prosperous path.

Figures from reports presented during the day show that the whole number of chapters in the state at the present time is 151, with a total membership of 16,112. The largest chapter is Goldenrod of Rockland, which has 472 members; the second largest is Deering chapter, No. 59 of Portland, with a membership of 317, while third and fourth in point of numbers are Mt. Olivet, of Lewiston, with 308, and Iona of Portland, which has 302. The net gain in membership throughout the state during the year is 866.

The order has a charity fund of $2,861, the income of which is used for the relief of poor and worthy members of the order and for orphans under the age of 18.

At the evening session at Masonic hall, Primrose chapter, 152, exemplified work of the order, and Deering chapter did some work in their own hall at Woodford, both before large audiences.

Ella M. Hastings of Thomaston was appointed grand marshal.

The convention closed with a most enjoyable although informal reception to the grand officers in the green room of the Congress Square hotel Wednesday evening and attracted a large assemblage that enjoyed every moment of the evening. During the evening an excellent concert program was rendered by an orchestra of ladies.

THE COMET A FAILURE
Star-Gazers Want Their Money Back--Not to be Compared to the Comets of 1873 and 1882.

In the brief interludes when we have been permitted to get a glimpse of the evening sky during the past week there has been much craning of necks and straining of vision to get a glimpse of Halley's wonderful comet. If there is anybody who has felt repaid for the amount of patience exercised in this search that person has not made the comet nearest to the earth, May 18, has the following to say about what has come no nearer to living up to its press notices than does the average circus.

If either of the local theatres put up such a bum performance it would be boycotted by the public until the humbug was forgotten.

The Portland Press reviewing the awful things that superstitious persons expected to happen when the comet came nearest to the earth, May 18, has the following to say about what has taken place since that date:

Presently it was discovered that the head of the comet had indeed passed between the earth and the sun as calculated but had left its tail behind. By some cause the comet had been short of its appendage, and this was seen on one side of the sun, while the nucleus was on the other.

Then things began to happen to what was left of the comet. In the first place, it was not visible to the naked eye at all or but faintly. It appeared to have no tail or only a rudimentary one. As seen through the telescope it was described as "a woolly star." Different observers saw different sights. At Columbus observatory Monday night it showed a short bright tail directed toward the sun. But at Williams Bay the same night the saw "forty degrees of new-born tail for the comet and a doubling of its luminosity, owing to flaming hydro-carbon gas," and Professor Frost said the internal activity of the comet was in full blast and it was "making gas at a terrific rate." At the Lick observatory they saw only a short tail.

Again at Cambridge Tuesday night the comet was seen by the naked eye as a faint star, through a field glass as a nebulous blur of light, and through the telescope as having a tail of ten degrees of length or about the distance between the two stars at the bottom of the Great Bear, this extending to the eastward, while a short protruding tail directed toward the sun and the head of the comet was a little fainter than the polar star.

That is all. As a spectacle the comet has so far been a failure, and there is not much expectancy that it will be made up by the internal activity of the universe, subject in its courses to aberrations from the influence of the great planetary and stellar bodies and to recurrent fiery and wasting baths in the heat of the sun and occasionally to collisions, its disintegration and disappearance can be only a matter of time. It is a tantalizing and insoluble mystery. But Halley's has not lived up to its reputation.

Many people now living have distinct recollection of Donati's comet of 1858, which was a magnificent object with a tail of 60 degrees, and which has a period of about 2000 years. Few remember the great body of 1843, but a large number recollect the comet of 1882, the most brilliant one of the century, which had a tail computed at 200,000,000 miles in length. The comet of 1873 was also quite a sight, but in comparison with any of these Halley's is of little account.

The comet of 1873 was also quite a sight, but in comparison with any of these Halley's is of little account.

Many people now living have distinct recollection of Donati's comet of 1858, which was a magnificent object with a tail of 60 degrees, and which has a period of about 2000 years. ## You Can Be a Better Cook

It isn't all in the "knack." The utensils you use go a long way toward making your food fine and appetizing or ill-cooked and indigestible.

It's impossible to make the best cookery in utensils that quickly scorch or crack and scale off, rust and corrode. And such utensils are dangerous. Authorities say that cancer comes of eating particles of glass chipped off from ordinary enamel ware when hot.

The heat expands the iron frame but the coating of glass—which is all enamel ware is—does not expand so fast, consequently it breaks and gets mixed with the food.

There is no such danger from food cooked in up-to-date

LIFE NOT A FAILURE

Freeman W. Smith Takes Exception to William Farrow's Statement and Tells Why.

Under date of May 23 Freeman W. Smith of Verona Park, a former resident of this city, writes the following open letter to William Farrow, whose autobiography recently appeared in The Courier-Gazette:

I have read your interesting letter of May 14 in The Courier-Gazette and I wish to differ with you a little when you say: "I can't see as I have been any benefit to this world, and that life is about as near a failure as you can find it."

Now my good brother it would take a large book to contain all the good deeds, words and thoughts that have emanated from you, I do not say that you have not made mistakes, or said and done wrong things. Every kind word you ever uttered, every pleasant smile, every hearty handclasp, every deed of charity, every word of good advice, every kind and loving thought, every honest day's labor—all these have helped to make the world better.

The hundreds of sails you have made have helped many a sailor along over the rough seas and perhaps have been the means of saving precious lives. I doubt not that many an honest mariner has thanked God for the good strong sails you have made to catch and hold the winds and send him safely into port.

No life can be a failure. The Infinite Father never made a useless life. Your life, while it has been very long and eventful, is but just begun. Immortality is the generous portion bestowed upon all mankind by the great loving Over Soul. Your industrious, ambitious and brotherly nature will never allow you to be idle, and "over there" in the celestial realms you will have abundant opportunities to gratify the desires of your heart in doing good in the reunion of multitudes of old friends, comrades and loved ones, in the freedom of physical infirmities, in receiving the thanks and gratitude of the many you have assisted on earth and in the great open fields of research, knowledge, growth and increasing progression.

HURRICANE

The H. A. C. baseball club met Vinalhaven's team May 22 and was defeated 11 to 6. The losers held them down 3 to 1 till the first part of the seventh inning. The feature of the game was Rowling Vinal's home run. H. C. Vinal would like games with Vinalhaven, Rockland, Thomaston and Camden high.

The drama "Among the Breakers," which was given in Vinalhaven Tuesday, May 17, was presented well by the Vinalhaven crowd and they wish to extend thanks. "The Emigrant's Daughter" will be played soon. There will be a dance in town hall Friday, June 10, with music by Mad-dock's Big 3.

BAD DREAMS

Nightmare, Restlessness and Night sweats all Caused by Indigestion.

Half of the nervousness in the world, all of the disturbing dreams and nightmares can be ended in a few weeks by a simple, inexpensive treatment.

Upset stomach is the cause of nervousness and bad dreams. Your food is lying in your stomach undigested and fermenting; it is forming poisonous gases which irritate the pneumogastric nerve that leads direct from the brain, and ends in a network of tiny branches running through the stomach.

It is also the irritation of this great pneumogastric nerve that causes headaches. Many times people have severe headaches and know they are caused by the stomach, but do not know in what manner.

If you are nervous, have dreams or nightmares, and do not sleep sound at night, get a fifty-cent box of Micon stomach tablets and take one or two after or with meals. They relieve distressed stomach in 5 minutes. Sold by druggists everywhere and by C. H. Pendleton and W. H. Kittredge, who guarantees the cure indigestion or money back.

PRIZES FOR CORN.

Department of Agricultural Extension, University of Maine, Offers Some Inducements.

The Department of Agricultural Extension of the University of Maine has a small quantity of eight-rowed and twelve-rowed Maine grown flint corn that will be sent to applicants—men, women, boys, or girls—as long as the supply lasts. Two ears are sent to each person who will plant the corn and keep a small amount of data for the University. Each one growing the corn will send in ten of his best ears to the University with his data by Oct. 20. A part of this corn will be sent to the New England Corn Exposition at Worcester, Mass., in November, 1910, and will be exhibited in the name of the grower who will be entitled to whatever prizes may be secured on his sample. This corn will be returned to the University to be exhibited during Farmers' Week in 1911, at which time prizes will be given for exhibits in two following classes:

Class A—Prizes for men and women. For the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd prize lots of ten ears of corn will be sent to the grower of corn, board and room of the grower who brings his corn and remains through Farmers' Week, 1911.

Class B—Prizes for boys and girls. For the 1st, 2nd and 3rd prize lots of ten ears of corn grown by a boy or girl under 18 years of age, we will pay the cost of railroad fare, board and room of the grower to those who bring their corn and remain through Farmers' Week, 1911.

Those desiring corn can secure it by addressing George E. Simmons, Superintendent of Agricultural Extension Work, University of Maine, Orono, Maine.

JULIAN AGAIN WRITES

A Newsy Letter That Will Interest Many in This Vicinity.

Stony Creek, Conn., May 23. In my last letter I anticipated a lively season of work at the granite quarries in this vicinity. A few men have been put on at the Red Hill quarries and the crew at the Norcross Co.'s works remains the same as when I last wrote, about 50 cutters at work at present writing.

Miss Anna Lazzare, daughter of Antonio Lazzare of this place, has been singing with the Hammerstein Opera Co. in New York and has scored a big success.

Clinton, son of Harry Julian, who was born at Vinalhaven 20 years ago, has recently returned home from Richmond, Va. He is one of the leading clarinet players in the Governor's foot guard band, who with the Governor attended the decoration of a Memorial building in that city. The party report the best time of their lives and are loud in praise of the generous hospitality of the South.

The summer boarders are arriving daily and soon Stony Creek will be in full swing as a summer resort.

The trolley line from this place to Guilford is being rushed these days and soon we hope to be in communication with New London, Providence and other eastern cities.

A bad accident took place near this place Saturday afternoon. The section foreman, John Sullivan, was struck by the fast express and was so badly injured that he died in the New Haven hospital the same evening. He leaves a wife and four small children. The report on this recent fire at the New Haven county jail reveals the fact that the prisoners were let out to a chair making company for less than ten cents a day and even that exorbitant wage rate had not been squared up. This seems to be a clear case for the walking delegate to look into at once.

Stony Creek has no place to play ball in as the owners of the old grounds refuse to rent their land again.

Women as Well as Men are Made Miserable by Kidney and Bladder Trouble.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh, or if, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit as most people suppose.

Women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble, and both need the same great remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also a pamphlet telling all about Swamp-Root, including many of the thousands of testimonials received from sufferers who found Swamp-Root to be just the remedy needed. In writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure and mention this paper. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.
