CURE FOR THE LAME
by DR. FRANK, the well known knee, sprain, and rheumatism specialist, 100 N. 2nd St., St. Paul, Minn.

Those who compete for the great prize of $500 a bush off feed by the American Agriculturist for the best ears of corn, wheat, oats and potatoes (and other crops), plants that will give the highest yield of these crops to compete for these prizes, will be especially interested in the March number of this famous magazine, which gives important practical suggestions from expert growers on each of these crops in different parts of the country. Much experience and many facts are given in these articles and about 250 illustrations are given. It is of great practical value to all growers of these crops and that will be new to most of them.

If every young farmer starting out with his business on a small capital could be made to realize the importance of keeping his books, he would be a great deal better off than he is now. It is a very easy thing to do, and it will make a man's life much easier. Good business habits will be a great help to him, and he will be a much better man, and a much better citizen, and a much better farmer, while his family will be a much better one. The advantages of attending to the needs of the grape grower are obvious. There is no means of communication between farmers whereby attention could be centered on any matter, or a community of effort be exerted to solve any movement, however much their importance might be recognized by individuals. For this reason the grape has passed this matter as lost.

This shows that the interests of agriculture will be respected by law makers when we stand up for our rights.

The grape has thus shown its ability to cope with important matters and it may be expected that its influence will be felt in the future in all of its work.

From the humble matters in the subordinate grapes to great national questions the grape has a broad field of usefulness.—Maine Farmer.

The Androscoggin Valley Agricultural Society will hold its next fair, exhibition and trot, Sept. 26-28, 1889.

A few minutes before 12 o'clock the President of the United States was announced. He entered the chamber accompanied by his presiding officer, followed by his cabinet. A moment later the president-elect was announced. He entered with Senator William M. McKelvin of Cleveland and the president-elect were greeted with tremendous applause from the galleries and the floor. They were taken to their seats by the sergeant-at-arms. After the president-elect had been seated at the head of the senate coach reached the hour of noon the vice president-elect was announced. He was escorted to the place of honor by the presiding officer, Chief Justice William C. Taft. Every one in the chamber arose and remained standing while Senator Ingalls ad-

HARRISON TAKING OATH.

At the conclusion of the reading of the oath, the president, with his right hand clasping the bible, bowed his head in assent. A silence almost painful had marked this proceeding, and when it was ended there was another tremendous burst of applause. The bible on which the oath was administered was a black, flexible, morocco-bound volume about 10 by 8 inches in size, and containing 101 pages of large, fat, antique, printed on this paper with gold edges and is designed for the use of lawyers, with supplementary notes in accordance with his custom, Mr. McKensey, clerk of the supreme court, will present this book to Mrs. Harrison as a precious memento of the occasion. The chairman of the ceremony, Mr. Harrison having at length outlasted somewhat in deference to President Harrison's request, he drew from his pocket a roll of manuscript and after adjusting his eye-glasses, began reading his inaugural address.

William Henry Harrison Miller, the former law partner of Gen. Harrison, died at Argente, Ontario county, N. Y., nearly forty-eight years ago. His father was a Whig and an admirer of Gen. Harrison. His father entered Hamilton college at 16 years of age, and was graduated at 20, devoting a portion of the last college year to the study of law, which promise he had determined to follow. When he left college he taught school and studied law at the same time for two years. He was so successful as a student that some of his friends tried to induce him to make it a profession.

He preferred the law, however, and soon entered into its study under the instruction of Judge Waite of Toledo, O. afterward

His Native Land.

A rather good joke is told concerning a late local option movement at Independence, Mo. The local option had a large attendance committee at the polls to see to it that fraudulent votes were run in. A stranger, man, with Celtic features, offered to vote as a "honest" man, and was challenged his vote. The Celt was truthfully answer the questions put to him. "How long have you resided in this town?" "About a year." "How long have you been in Independence?" "Nearly year." "Have you ever taken out naturalization papers?" "No, sir." Police, he has been in custody for attempting cast a fraudulent vote. An indictment next in order, so it was thought best ascertain the exact nationality of the stranger. "What country are you from?" asked. "Of what country was you a native?" He answered, "Massachusetts."
