Competitive drills between the different military companies of the State are becoming quite a rage. A good thing, which will probably result in improvement.

JUDGE FORTER will hold the March term of the Supreme Judicial Court in Somerset County, which opens to-day. The Judge left Bethel for Skowhegan yesterday.

THE BETHEL NEWS is the name of a new local weekly soon to be published at Bethel Hill by a Mr. Cobb from West-brook. The News has the best wishes of the Democrat.

JOHN E. STEPHENS, Esq., of Rumford Centre, is a candidate for Postmaster at that place. Mr. Stephens possesses every qualification and his appointment would be an excellent one.

THE CROW QUARRY law goes into effect April 1st. Query: How many cents' worth of powder and shot will the average small boy require with which to procure ten cents' worth of crow's head?

A GREAT deal of sickness is reported as the result of exposure to inclement weather during the inauguration ceremonies on the 4th of this month. The fifteenth Congress made a mistake when it refused to take any action looking toward a change in inauguration day.

The third month of the year 1889 is more than half gone, and yet no person has been killed in Maine since the first of January—not even in Augusta. There have been some attempts at homicide, but they have been unsuccessful. The record made so far is better than that of 1888.

On the standing committees of the United States Senate, as chosen last week, Senator Frye is chairman of the committee on commerce, and is also on foreign relations, executive departments, and privileges and elections. Senator Hale is chairman of the census committee, and is also on appropriations, epidemic diseases, and naval affairs.

Flow GEORGE D. BISHOP, of Buckfield, is reported by the daily papers to be a candidate for United States Marshal, his former position. Mr. Bishop administered the affairs of that office with ability and credit to himself under President Arthur's administration and if he wants to try it again his many Oxford County friends would be glad to see him "get there."

THE Maine Legislature adjourned finally last Wednesday, after a session of 73 days. It has been a hard working body, and the members, in point of labor at least, have fully earned the pittance they receive for their services, which is sufficient to pay their board bill if they are economical in the matter of table fare. The total number of bills and resolutions passed was one more than the number passed by the Legislature of two years ago, which was a record for that respect. The body which has just adjourned is generally commended for the manner in which it has examined all matters presented for its consideration.

THE Legislature has disposed of several quite important matters, one being the refunding of that portion of the State debt which matures during the present year. The new bonds are to be at three per cent.

One of the most important matters before the Legislature, if not the one of the highest importance, was the question of the location of the State capital, was effectively settled, for the present at least, with a kind of feckless haste not generally satisfactory to all the people of the State. When the question of removal of the capital was first agitated, it appeared from the canvass that a majority of the members were in favor of removal, and those who feared such action were clamorous that the matter should be submitted to the people. When, however, the majority of the committee decided that the matter should be submitted to the people by referring it to the next Legislature, the opponents of the measure lost their anxiety, and concluded that the question ought not to be referred; accordingly they bent their energies to prevent its reference. The two houses voted that legislation was inexpedient. Then a resolution was introduced appropriating $150,000 for the building of an additional wing on the present State House, and this was rushed through, in spite of all opposition, during the closing days of the session. The situation required more sudden conversions and changes of front than have been produced by any public question in this State for many previous years. But the question of the location of the capital has been settled for a good many years, and the people have not had a chance to vote on the matter.

WHETHER we like this way of disposing of the matter or not—and we must confess that we don't—there is at least the satisfaction of knowing that the State will in time be provided with a building more nearly suited to its needs than at present. Whether $150,000 will put up an addition that will make the State House a pride to the State, is a serious question; but at any rate, it will be better than it is now.

THE liquor laws remain unchanged, this Legislature being the first for many years that has not made some change intended for an improvement. A bill was passed by the House allowing apothecaries to sell liquor under certain conditions and restrictions. The Senate killed the bill, and the House, having further considered the matter, concurred. It opened two wide a door.

ONE of the really important acts of the Legislature was the passage of the free text book bill, which obliges towns to furnish school books for the use of the scholars in the public schools, under such rules and regulations as the school committee may make. The act takes effect August 1st, 1890.

ARMISTICE as a political argument is the most unconvincing of all. It recalls unfavorably the memory of the parts for whose benefit it is intended. The Paris peace treaty, to take one of the latest and most conspicuous examples, ended in a day the work of years and laid the cause of the French Revolution in the hands of the assassin. The same was the case with the armistice in the case of John M. Clayton in Arkansas. It was the armistice in the case of John M. Clayton in Arkansas. It was the armistice in the case of John M. Clayton in Arkansas.

WHERE THIEVES CANNOT ENTER.

Interior of a Safe Deposit Vault—A Rich Man's $2,000,000 Confidence.

"So you think it would be an easy matter for an expert thief to get into our safe deposit vault?" said the proprietor of a safe deposit company. "Come in with me and see for yourself."

Back through the office he led the reporter, through an iron lattice work partition, and thence into the store walled iron lined enclosure, and this is how it looks.

The ceiling, walls and floor of the compartments are all lined with the heaviest railroad iron, the alternate pieces being inverted so as to present a solid mass, without any interstices. Heavy bolts running in each direction bind the whole firmly together, making the sides impenetrable.

Surrounding the inner iron frame are heavy layers of stone, cement and brick. This structure is a shell and protecting cover for the different iron money boxes, which contain more than a million of dollars.

Each of the safe is built in the most approved fire and burglar proof style. The walls are double, the inner shell being of alternate layers of hard and soft steel, and a half inch in thickness, making a shell about three inches thick.

Between the outer and inner walls is an air passage several inches thick, in the fire proof padding of plaster cement and upon which the door is built. The outer wall is composed of layers of iron about two inches thick.

There are two doors to each safe, one for the inner wall and the other for the outer shell. The outer door has a double combination lock and also a time lock. The latter will not allow the safe to be opened over the combination, but is known until after the time limit has expired. The time lock will not allow the safe to be opened between the hour of closing in the evening and the hour of opening in the morning.

With all these safeguards the president said that the safe will defy the efforts of the thief, the fire, the flood and the earthquake. The outer door of the vault is opened by means of a large steel lever. Each of the safes is about eight feet in breadth, the same in height and twenty feet in length, and each will weigh 500 pounds.

"It looks very strong," said the reporter. "It looks very strong," said the reporter. "It looks very strong," said the reporter. "It looks very strong," said the reporter. "It looks very strong," said the reporter.

"Looks! Why, my boy, there isn't a burglar in New York nor a score of them, who could break into these vaults inside of fifty-six hours. And we have not the only safe boxes in New York. There are—more or more equally strong in London, in Wall Street that holds some $5,000,000 worth of securities at their market value. They have been locked up for two years. Their owner has never once called for them, and I have no doubt that he sleeps as quietly at night as if his property were guarded by the whole United States army, and doubtless a great deal more so."—New York Star.

"Not afraid." An army officer had gone to see some Indian shot off his back. The animals were confined in a large pen, and were killed, two or three at a time, as they were needed. Whoever did the shooting clambered over a fence, picked out his beast and shot him in the forehead. Suddenly one of the officers surprised him in charge of a gun.

"Come now, show those Indians that we can beat them with the rifle." I could not well decline, and having of late had some practice, I trusted to the steadiness of my hand for success.

I had to advance nearly to the middle of the enclosure before I could catch the eye of my intended victim, the thing necessary in my forehead. I had no sooner attracted his attention, however, than he lowered his head and charged straight at me.

My only safety lay in my coolness and deliberation, as I very well knew. I raised my rifle slowly, and as the Indian came on, I came upon the front sight of my gun I pulled the trigger. The furious animal fell, with all his four feet drawn close under his body. He was dead.

As I looked at the lifeless mass before me a shot from the fence caused me to raise my eyes. My last target was an angry man, who broke from the herd and with head down charged right upon me. I had a good distance to run to reach the fence. I reached it, however, and as I put my foot upon a lower rail, I was struck by the Indian, who had sprung to the top of the fence, caught me by the arm and lifted me as if I had been an infant, just as the infuriated beast struck his hoofs against the fence.

As the Indian drew me up to himself he clapped his hand upon my heart, and for a moment he said in his own language: "You're a coward."

"You're a coward," he said. "You're a coward," he said. "You're a coward," he said. "You're a coward," he said. "You're a coward," he said.
