Surficial Materials

Old Town Quadrangle, Maine

Digital mapping project by Alice R. Kelley, Joseph T. Kelley Dana F. Dougherty, Edward H. Bates

Maine Geological Survey

Copyright © 2009

Open File No. 08-48

This map is prepared by the
Maine Geological Survey

Contribution of Natural Resources Programs, University of Maine, and the Maine Department of Environmental Protection

Scale 1:24,000

Surficial Materials

Cretaceous pumice, scoria, and ash are found throughout the map
region, but they are particularly abundant near the northwestern boundary of the quadrangle. These materials are commonly found in coastal areas and are often used for construction purposes. The pumice is often used as a roadbed material due to its lightweight and insulating properties.

Cretaceous pumice, scoria, and ash are found throughout the map
region, but they are particularly abundant near the northwestern
boundary of the quadrangle. These materials are commonly
found in coastal areas and are often used for construction
purposes. The pumice is often used as a roadbed material due to its
lightweight and insulating properties.

Cretaceous pumice, scoria, and ash are found throughout the map
region, but they are particularly abundant near the northwestern
boundary of the quadrangle. These materials are commonly
found in coastal areas and are often used for construction
purposes. The pumice is often used as a roadbed material due to its
lightweight and insulating properties.

Cretaceous pumice, scoria, and ash are found throughout the map
region, but they are particularly abundant near the northwestern
boundary of the quadrangle. These materials are commonly
found in coastal areas and are often used for construction
purposes. The pumice is often used as a roadbed material due to its
lightweight and insulating properties.

Cretaceous pumice, scoria, and ash are found throughout the map
region, but they are particularly abundant near the northwestern
boundary of the quadrangle. These materials are commonly
found in coastal areas and are often used for construction
purposes. The pumice is often used as a roadbed material due to its
lightweight and insulating properties.

Cretaceous pumice, scoria, and ash are found throughout the map
region, but they are particularly abundant near the northwestern
boundary of the quadrangle. These materials are commonly
found in coastal areas and are often used for construction
purposes. The pumice is often used as a roadbed material due to its
lightweight and insulating properties.

Cretaceous pumice, scoria, and ash are found throughout the map
region, but they are particularly abundant near the northwestern
boundary of the quadrangle. These materials are commonly
found in coastal areas and are often used for construction
purposes. The pumice is often used as a roadbed material due to its
lightweight and insulating properties.

Cretaceous pumice, scoria, and ash are found throughout the map
region, but they are particularly abundant near the northwestern
boundary of the quadrangle. These materials are commonly
found in coastal areas and are often used for construction
purposes. The pumice is often used as a roadbed material due to its
lightweight and insulating properties.

Cretaceous pumice, scoria, and ash are found throughout the map
region, but they are particularly abundant near the northwestern
boundary of the quadrangle. These materials are commonly
found in coastal areas and are often used for construction
purposes. The pumice is often used as a roadbed material due to its
lightweight and insulating properties.

Cretaceous pumice, scoria, and ash are found throughout the map
region, but they are particularly abundant near the northwestern
boundary of the quadrangle. These materials are commonly
found in coastal areas and are often used for construction
purposes. The pumice is often used as a roadbed material due to its
lightweight and insulating properties.

Cretaceous pumice, scoria, and ash are found throughout the map
region, but they are particularly abundant near the northwestern
boundary of the quadrangle. These materials are commonly
found in coastal areas and are often used for construction
purposes. The pumice is often used as a roadbed material due to its
lightweight and insulating properties.

Cretaceous pumice, scoria, and ash are found throughout the map
region, but they are particularly abundant near the northwestern
boundary of the quadrangle. These materials are commonly
found in coastal areas and are often used for construction
purposes. The pumice is often used as a roadbed material due to its
lightweight and insulating properties.

Cretaceous pumice, scoria, and ash are found throughout the map
region, but they are particularly abundant near the northwestern
boundary of the quadrangle. These materials are commonly
found in coastal areas and are often used for construction
purposes. The pumice is often used as a roadbed material due to its
lightweight and insulating properties.

Cretaceous pumice, scoria, and ash are found throughout the map
region, but they are particularly abundant near the northwestern
boundary of the quadrangle. These materials are commonly
found in coastal areas and are often used for construction
purposes. The pumice is often used as a roadbed material due to its
lightweight and insulating properties.

Cretaceous pumice, scoria, and ash are found throughout the map
region, but they are particularly abundant near the northwestern
boundary of the quadrangle. These materials are commonly
found in coastal areas and are often used for construction
purposes. The pumice is often used as a roadbed material due to its
lightweight and insulating properties.

Cretaceous pumice, scoria, and ash are found throughout the map
region, but they are particularly abundant near the northwestern
boundary of the quadrangle. These materials are commonly
found in coastal areas and are often used for construction
purposes. The pumice is often used as a roadbed material due to its
lightweight and insulating properties.

Cretaceous pumice, scoria, and ash are found throughout the map
region, but they are particularly abundant near the northwestern
boundary of the quadrangle. These materials are commonly
found in coastal areas and are often used for construction
purposes. The pumice is often used as a roadbed material due to its
lightweight and insulating properties.