

THE POSTAL CARD BRIGADE.

WEST BETHEL.

On Thursday evening, the 12th inst., we were discovered by the night watchman in the lower part of a steam mill. The whistle being blown, a large crowd of men were at once ready to fight the fire and just in season to save the mill from destruction.

Those who have failed to see the mature reality of "Love's Young Dream," in a series of tableaux, have been told that the show is not worth the price of the tickets. The show has been free to all.

Reports of approaching marriages are one of the topics of conversation here just now.

A. W. Grover and E. B. Shaw loaded another cart with potatoes last week. November has this year given all a chance to prepare for winter, and some are now waiting snow.

ALBANY.

The George F. Tewksbury, of Alfred, who was out from prison for fourteen years, was arrested by the police in the city of Albany. He was a man of more than ordinary strength of mind and energy of character. A very decided Christian, devoted to his family and his work, he was a man of great energy and was a very successful business man.

I—CHARADE.
Q. Why will men labor to reap a first store?
Regardless of body or mind?
When many and many in seeking to gain
But sorrow and poverty find?
The better, far better for wisdom to seek;
A second of power then you may,
For riches will take to them wings and depart.
But wisdom abides every day.
When autumn approaches to linger a while
The tall, stately stalks may be seen,
With bright yellow flowers drooping gracefully down,
And long pointed leaves of dark green.

THE HOMEMAKERS' COLUMN.

We hope every homemaker will pass a happy Thanksgiving, as they no doubt will make the day enjoyable to others. The following extract from an article of Marion Harland's on this subject, brings out some thoughts we are apt to pass over:

THE THANKSGIVING DINNER.
BY MARION HARLAND.

A Thanksgiving dinner should be the visible rendering of thought and emotion. In clearing away the idolatries of Paganism, we backed so fiercely that some of the best of our civilization, with a host of other offerings of the spirit, were lost. The Thanksgiving dinner, with its host of other offerings of the spirit, were lost. The Thanksgiving dinner, with its host of other offerings of the spirit, were lost.

One Experience of Many.

Having experienced a great deal of "Trouble" from indigestion, so much so that I came near losing my life—

My trouble always came after eating any food—

However light and digestible.

For two or three hours at a time I had to go through the most excruciating pains.

"And only one way I ever got 'Relief'."

Was by throwing up all my stomach contents! No one can conceive the pain that I had to go through, until "At last!"

I was taken! "So that for three weeks I lay in bed and

Could eat nothing!

My sufferings were so that I called two doctors to give me something that would stop the pain.

Their efforts were no good to me. At last I heard a good deal "About your Hip Bitters."

And determined to try them. I took the contents of a bottle—

Next day I was out of bed, and have not seen a doctor since!

"I am well and strong, and I have recommended it to hundreds of others. You have no such 'Relief' as I am!"

Geo. KENDALL, Alliston, Boston, Mass.

WHAT IS DYSPEPSIA?

Among the many symptoms of Dyspepsia or indigestion the most prominent are: Variable appetite; faint, gnawing feeling at pit of the stomach, with unsatisfied craving for food; heartburn, feeling of weight and wind in the stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, low spirits, general prostration, headache, and constipation. There is no form of disease more prevalent than Dyspepsia, and none so peculiar to the high-living and rapid-eating American people. Alcohol and tobacco produce Dyspepsia; also, bad air, rapid eating, etc. BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS will cure the worst case, by regulating the bowels and toning up the digestive organs. Sold everywhere.

SEA MONSTER.

Edmund Collins writes from Halifax to the New York Sun as follows:

I met a diver here who was working on a wreck off the coast. "Is it true," I asked, "that divers see such wonders when they go below?"

He told me a story of thrilling interest in reply. A large ship laden with silks and valuable stuffs had been caught by the vagrant tides of the gulf and born through the fog toward the Newfoundland coast till the face of a tall cliff loomed against the bowsprit. Then a swell rolled in and lifted the vessel, and laid her across a sunken rock that barred the mouth of Chance Cove. Not many minutes afterward she lay at the bottom of the gulf, with all her costly bales, her crew and her passengers. The undertow soon began to cast precious boxes upon the land, and the underwater dispatched divers and boats and men to recover the sunken cargo.

One afternoon when dinner was ended and the sea had grown smooth enough to permit operations, the boat, served by a diver of the name of Harley, rowed out from the rocks ahead of the others. During the night there had been a heavy gale, and through the calm of the morning innumerable creatures of the sea, driven by the gale into deeper water, had returned to the stillness under the shelter of the cliffs. As the diver lay in his cowl from the cliff's side, holding his crowbar in his hands.

While he was engaged fastening the cantharus into a large bale of India shawls, he imagined that he saw some large object moving in the deep which glared from the cliff. He secured the shawls, gave the signal to hoist, and the package was raised. He now walked clear of the vessel, and stood upon the level rock at the sea bottom. He saw slowly approaching a huge and ill-shaped creature. It did not swim, but seemed to crawl along the bottom. Harley would have gone to the surface, but the package was above, and the men were engaged taking the bale on board. In a few seconds the monster was near enough for the diver to ascertain that its body resembled that of a turtle, that it walked upon a number of crooked legs, and had near its head, upon either side, an enormous arm. The arm terminated in what seemed a pair of enormous jaws, and in each of these gleamed a row of strong, sharp teeth.

At first he thought that the creature might not have observed him, and was only making its way toward the ship; but he quickly saw that its two gleaming eyes were fixed upon him, with a steady stare, and that the hideous thing was coming directly for himself. If the book would only descend, or another diver come down! He looked up, but could perceive nothing save the figure of the boat above him, resting like a little shadow upon the water. Then he took two or three paces along the ship's side, but the fish immediately changed its course, and crawled in such a direction as to cut off retreat. The fish was now only a few feet distant, and the sun bursting through a cloud show shimmering down through the green water, fully revealing the creature. Its armor was a dun russet, and a pair of antennae, long and supple, each like a coon's hair, protruded from its head.

Then the truth came upon Harley. This was the inexorable monster, the giant lobster of the deep sea. Only a little while before he had seen the huge arm of a lobster cast upon a beach after a gale, and heard that crawling about the sea, hundreds of miles from land, was to be seen a monster of the lobster kind, just as among the squids was found a gigantic devil fish. He had not believed that story, but here before him now was the terrible crustacean, more hideous and more huge than even repute had made him. The body was fully ten feet long and about three feet thick, while the length of each arm was not less than seven feet. He now began to retreat, thinking to escape his pursuer as he retreated. But the water here was so gloomy that he could not see at his arm's length. So he turned and walked toward the opening again, holding his crowbar in his hands. The lobster had put one claw upon the vessel's timber and was in the act of raising the other when Harley appeared. To pass out was impossible. So he stood with his back against a partition in the hold, waiting the attack. The fish came directly toward him, its two black, gleaming eyes glaring steadily. Harley made no move till he felt the coils of the squirming antennae fold themselves lithely around his neck. Then raising the crowbar he lunged it with all his strength at the lobster's head. The aim was accurate, but the point glanced from the thick, smooth shell, and was buried in the overlapping rings about the monster's neck.

For a moment the lobster seemed stunned, and Harley made a step outward, for he saw the hooks dangling in the water a few paces away. But the effect of the blow passed away almost simultaneously, and before the diver could sever the enormous jaws of one claw had closed upon his left arm. The thick and sharply pointed teeth penetrated the flesh to the very bone and held him in a firm and agonizing grip. The pain was as he told, that the undertow almost swooned; and in another moment his right leg was held fast in the fangs of the remaining claw. Then the kraken began to move rearward, dragging his victim toward the cliff, where, in the dark, still waters of the gulch, he might devour him without interruption.

The wretched man thrust his heels against the ship's timbers to resist the dragging of the fish; but the agony caused by the teeth tearing through his flesh was more than he could bear, and he made a short struggle he permitted himself to be borne as his captor would. But he resolved to make another effort for his liberty. Drawing his knife from his sheath, he plunged it into the fish's eye, turning the blade round and round. A stream of cloudy ooze came out, and left only a hollow socket. Maddened with pain, the brute began to crawl backward and forward, now lying on his side and alternately stretching and contracting his claws, but all the while holding the man in a vice-like grip. Then the light went out of the water, and he knew no more.

When he next opened his eyes he was in a hut upon the sea shore, and learned how another diver had descended and rescued him by severing his one and then the other of the lobster's claws.

"I am very tired," said the lady at the head of the boarding-house table, Monday morning, to the good-natured minister who sat at the other end. "You should not be," said the parson; "you didn't preach a sermon yesterday." "No," said the lady, almost unconsciously, "but I listened to one." Then followed an oppressive silence, which gave the minister time to reflect that he had come out only once before.

SEA MONSTER.

Edmund Collins writes from Halifax to the New York Sun as follows:

I met a diver here who was working on a wreck off the coast. "Is it true," I asked, "that divers see such wonders when they go below?"

He told me a story of thrilling interest in reply. A large ship laden with silks and valuable stuffs had been caught by the vagrant tides of the gulf and born through the fog toward the Newfoundland coast till the face of a tall cliff loomed against the bowsprit. Then a swell rolled in and lifted the vessel, and laid her across a sunken rock that barred the mouth of Chance Cove. Not many minutes afterward she lay at the bottom of the gulf, with all her costly bales, her crew and her passengers. The undertow soon began to cast precious boxes upon the land, and the underwater dispatched divers and boats and men to recover the sunken cargo.

One afternoon when dinner was ended and the sea had grown smooth enough to permit operations, the boat, served by a diver of the name of Harley, rowed out from the rocks ahead of the others. During the night there had been a heavy gale, and through the calm of the morning innumerable creatures of the sea, driven by the gale into deeper water, had returned to the stillness under the shelter of the cliffs. As the diver lay in his cowl from the cliff's side, holding his crowbar in his hands.

While he was engaged fastening the cantharus into a large bale of India shawls, he imagined that he saw some large object moving in the deep which glared from the cliff. He secured the shawls, gave the signal to hoist, and the package was raised. He now walked clear of the vessel, and stood upon the level rock at the sea bottom. He saw slowly approaching a huge and ill-shaped creature. It did not swim, but seemed to crawl along the bottom. Harley would have gone to the surface, but the package was above, and the men were engaged taking the bale on board. In a few seconds the monster was near enough for the diver to ascertain that its body resembled that of a turtle, that it walked upon a number of crooked legs, and had near its head, upon either side, an enormous arm. The arm terminated in what seemed a pair of enormous jaws, and in each of these gleamed a row of strong, sharp teeth.

At first he thought that the creature might not have observed him, and was only making its way toward the ship; but he quickly saw that its two gleaming eyes were fixed upon him, with a steady stare, and that the hideous thing was coming directly for himself. If the book would only descend, or another diver come down! He looked up, but could perceive nothing save the figure of the boat above him, resting like a little shadow upon the water. Then he took two or three paces along the ship's side, but the fish immediately changed its course, and crawled in such a direction as to cut off retreat. The fish was now only a few feet distant, and the sun bursting through a cloud show shimmering down through the green water, fully revealing the creature. Its armor was a dun russet, and a pair of antennae, long and supple, each like a coon's hair, protruded from its head.

Then the truth came upon Harley. This was the inexorable monster, the giant lobster of the deep sea. Only a little while before he had seen the huge arm of a lobster cast upon a beach after a gale, and heard that crawling about the sea, hundreds of miles from land, was to be seen a monster of the lobster kind, just as among the squids was found a gigantic devil fish. He had not believed that story, but here before him now was the terrible crustacean, more hideous and more huge than even repute had made him. The body was fully ten feet long and about three feet thick, while the length of each arm was not less than seven feet. He now began to retreat, thinking to escape his pursuer as he retreated. But the water here was so gloomy that he could not see at his arm's length. So he turned and walked toward the opening again, holding his crowbar in his hands. The lobster had put one claw upon the vessel's timber and was in the act of raising the other when Harley appeared. To pass out was impossible. So he stood with his back against a partition in the hold, waiting the attack. The fish came directly toward him, its two black, gleaming eyes glaring steadily. Harley made no move till he felt the coils of the squirming antennae fold themselves lithely around his neck. Then raising the crowbar he lunged it with all his strength at the lobster's head. The aim was accurate, but the point glanced from the thick, smooth shell, and was buried in the overlapping rings about the monster's neck.

For a moment the lobster seemed stunned, and Harley made a step outward, for he saw the hooks dangling in the water a few paces away. But the effect of the blow passed away almost simultaneously, and before the diver could sever the enormous jaws of one claw had closed upon his left arm. The thick and sharply pointed teeth penetrated the flesh to the very bone and held him in a firm and agonizing grip.
