THE OUTLOOK IN BATH

Governor Cobb Issues a Frank Statement Concerning Contract Which Iron Works Is To Handle.

Wednesday's Bath Times contained the following interview with former Governor Cobb:

In response to the request of a representative of the Times for an expression of the views of the operating management of the Bath Iron Works, Ltd., in relation to the present business and labor situation in that plant, and to the outlook for work in the near future, the president of the company, ex-Gov. William T. Cobb, has furnished the following statement:

"There is very little commercial shipbuilding in the United States at the present time, anywhere in the world. The reason is obvious. There is no business for ships that shows a profit. Many of them are idle and there is no immediate inducement for private capital to build or operate them. We are passing through a period of readjustment and waiting in almost every industry, and the depression in shipbuilding is particularly acute. This condition bears heavily upon a community like Bath, or upon any community where men employed in the shipbuilding trades constitute a large part of the wage-earning population. In the belief that this depression can be only temporary, the Bath Iron Works is doing everything in its power as a corporation to share with its employees and with the municipality, the severe and growing burdens imposed by the world-wide decline in the demand for ships.

"Prior to the war this plant had been engaged almost exclusively in the construction of torpedo boat destroyers for the United States Government. Its capacity had been sufficient for about one and one-half of these vessels each year. Its present capacity is more than twice this, and yet there are no more destroyers to be built, and there is no prospect of other naval work that could be handled here. Upon the completion of the war work, commercial building promised well, and the plant turned all its energies in that direction, with good success. But no more vessels of this type are now coming into the market either for building in this yard or in any other, as anxious wishing to be informed in such matters can readily learn. A short time ago the Department of Commerce asked for proposals on five lightships. Twenty-one bids were received, and among them were bids from the largest shipbuilding plants in the country.

The Directors of this Corporation, all Maine men, concluded that it would be better and fairer business for its shareholders, its faithful employees, and for the community, to go to the limit in the attempt to secure this work and thus keep the plant open and running, than to close. Its bid was the lowest, but only about $11,000 per boat below the next highest. In this bid nothing was included for profit or overhead charges, and it was based on the probable cost of material and labor alone. It is simply a desire and effort on the part of the corporation to furnish work for a limited number of men at a reduced rate of wages, during a period that we all hope will be of short duration. The entire amount appropriated by the government for these five lightships is far less than the cost of a single destroyer during the war, and not much in excess of the cost of one destroyer prior to the war. To meet the severe exigencies of a bid like this, not only must the holders of the common stock forego their dividends, but all salaries as well as wages must be reduced, and the heaviest cut will be taken by the highest-paid officials.

"Work is now going forward in preparing specifications for the material to be used in these ships, and until this material arrives there will be no occasion to employ help. The date for such arrival will probably be not earlier than late October or early November. The first of the coming year we see a demand for 150 wage earners. This peak of wage demand may be reached in August, 1922, when 600 men will undoubtedly be required. From that date the demand will steadily and correspondingly lessen, unless, of course, other work is secured.

"This, in brief, is a description of the present situation in this plant from the viewpoint of the operating management, and is given publicly because the former employees are entitled to it, and many others may be interested in it and because it is believed that a frank statement of the facts in regard to this particular contract and to the general condition of the shipbuilding business as this management sees it, may be helpful in bringing about a generous cooperation of all interests directly or indirectly concerned in the welfare of the wage earner and in the future prosperity of the city."

THE PLAYING OF GOLF.

Rockland's Beautiful Nine-Hole Course An Asset That Citizens Should Not Undervalue.

When, four years ago, the Rockland Country Club laid out a golf course upon the picturesque grounds on the north side of the city, Rockland took its place among the progressive communities of the country.

It has been the habit of many men who knew nothing about the subject, to allude to the game of golf as a joke, but that era of ignorance is rapidly passing. The tremendous growth of the sport during recent years is a measure of its intrinsic value.

In Rockland the ranks of golfers are steadily being recruited. Professional men and tradesmen are learning the value of the sport that brings them into the open air and pays them great dividends in recreation and health. But there are yet many men in our city whom golf has not yet numbered among its devotees. The Courier-Gazette is moved to recommend to their consideration the appended article, that lately appeared in the magazine, "Golf Illustrated." It was written by Frank Presbrey, at the head of one of New York's leading advertising agencies, who shows us how the body and mind are fed by golf, how the royal and ancient game has grown and how it meets the needs of business and professional men:

George Ade is accredited with that hoary remark that golf was not a game—it was a disease. At any rate it is infectious and there are few men who have ever felt the thrill of a long drive who have not fallen victim to its alluring fascination and become enthusiastic adherents. One great advantage of golf as a game is that the man who is a "duffer" gets just as much pleasure and health out of a round as if he were proficient. In fact, the poor player claims that he gets more exercise than a good player, because he makes many more strokes—which brings to mind the old Scotch story of the American beginner playing on a famous course in Scotland who, turning to his caddie, said: "How many strokes have I played, Caddie?" To which the caddie replied, with the sarcasm so commonly found among the bag carriers: "I kinna tell—ya need a caddie, ye need a caddie." And the other story of the American who, playing poorly, asked his caddie if he had seen worse playing, to which the caddie, with brutal frankness replied, "Never, sir."

What golf has done for the general health of the business man of the United States cannot be computed, but if testimony of individuals counts for anything, it has worked wonders. And why should this not be so when it calls out into the open count an army of thousands of men who, were it not for golf, would spend their time in clubs, on hotel porches or in homes, probably smoking their heads off, "listening to their arteries growing hard," or, if not that, getting no exercise of any sort.

If testimony were needed as to what golf has done to keep men young, it can be found at any one of the seniors' tournaments, held each autumn at the Apawamis Club at Rye, N. Y., where nearly 400 men, all more than 55 years of age, gather for their annual tournament. Of the players in the last meet there were five over 80, and upwards of 30 beyond three score and ten, while those between 60 and 70 were too numerous to count. It is doubtful if any gathering is more representative of the leading men of America in professional and business life. It includes justices of the United States Supreme Court and of the highest courts of several States, bankers of international fame, well-known men of letters, clergymen, physicians and editors; in fact, every walk of life.

Darwin P. Kingsley, the president of the New York Life Insurance Company and an ex-president and one of the leading spirits of the Senior's Golf Association, at a recent banquet said: "We have been young, as youth goes. We have paid that debt by raising up sons and daughters to take our places. We have played our part in the fierce contests of middle life—and, I think, played it honorably. Now we come together as men like us have never before assembled. Why? Because we have discovered, as alas! thousands of others have not, how to meet advancing age manfully. By this game of golf and this fellowship we vanquish time even as the boy scores a 79. Neither of us knows just how we do it, but we do it."

"We have learned what King Henry meant when in wooing Katherine he said: 'But in faith, Kate, the elder I wax, the better shall appear; my comfort is that old age, that ill-layer of beauty, can do no more spoil upon my face.' By this glorious game and this gracious fellowship 'tis true we ripe and ripe; but we are 'too much 'in the sun' to rot—the sun that browns our bodies and clears our brains. We are, too, in that other sunlight that floods our souls and teaches us to laugh at time, the fearless sunlight of philosophy which makes our Western sky more glorious than any sky of youth."

The public press has many times referred to the fact that President Harding is not only an ardent follower of golf, but relies on golf to keep him in fit physical and mental condition to solve the tremendous problems he has before him at all times. Mind you, this is not for the fun of the game, but solely because the President knows that a round of golf, with its exercise in the open air, will do more to put mind and body in fine shape than any other form of exercise.

The hole that golf has taken on the American business and professional man is so incompressible that misconception of the game by those who know nothing of its fascination is ready to be expected. It was Daly, the comedian, I believe, who early in the development of the game here, said of golf, "Oh! yes; it's a great game; you hit a little rubber ball with a club and if you find it the same day, you win." Golf is really only about 30 years old here, although its traditions run back several centuries in Scotland and Hol-

REFINING GASOLINE

New Process Which It is Predicted Will Revolutionize Industry.

From the Tulsa Daily World of Aug. 7 the following story is reprinted of a new process in refining gasoline, of interest to everybody who makes use of that source of power. Robert Law, Jr., of New York and Rockport, is the head of the Barnsdall company that is the first to secure the rights to the discovery. The Oklahoma paper says:

"The process, while adaptable to any grade of oil, will recover 75 percent of gasoline from gas oil and will generate gas enough to largely operate the plant," said Frank Holsten, vice president of the Barnsdall Refining Company, who has been putting to practical test the new process invented by Dr. Ramage and which bids fair to revolutionize the refining industry and make Dr. Ramage as famous in the annals of the refining industry as Dr. Burton, inventor of the Burton process, or Colonel Drake, who discovered the first oil well.

It was at Detroit, during the closing months of the last year, that the first intimation of the new process invented by Dr. Ramage, who had called to his aid Messrs. Beall and Briscoe, the former a noted engineer with the Packard Motor Company, and the latter the inventor of the Briscoe car and the head of the construction bureau of the navy department in foreign lands during the war, was brought forward as a revolutionary process well adapted to bringing the independent refiner out of the almost hopeless position he had been placed in by reason of the Burton process being used by all Standard Oil Company refineries, and placing him far beyond the danger of annihilation no matter how strong the competition of the big monopoly might become.

And now, after five months of careful demonstration with a test plant large enough to make a practical test of the new process, as against what is usually called a laboratory test, and with the best technical talent available, inasmuch as John L. Gray, president of the Barnsdall Refining Company, and well known wherever oil is refined, assisted by not only the inventor himself, because Dr. Ramage has been on the job at the Bigheart refinery of the Barnsdall Refining Company, but also under the careful supervision of Frank Holsten, than whom there is no better practical refiner in the country, the result is made public.

"We have named the new gasoline 'super-gas' because we have demonstrated in the Barnsdall Oil Company's cars that this gasoline will give 25 to 35 per cent more mileage as I have just indicated, and moreover, will be able to avoid the 'knocks' in the motor as the combustion is more complete. There is an entire absence of carbon, and the process was discovered by Dr. Ramage, who used a somewhat similar process during the war for making oilfines, for the manufacture of explosives.

"He then conceived the idea of working these oilfines into saturated hydrocarbons by the addition of hydrogen and polymerization, which he succeeded in doing. The fluid produced is heavier than gasoline, water-white in color and on the boiling point and end point are about the same as navy gasoline. When you consider that the Burton process will convert only about 40 per cent of gasoline you can understand the magnitude of this discovery and its bearing on the future of the industry. The Barnsdall Refining Company has acquired the sole rights to the use of this process, and we believe it to be of vast importance as bearing on the future usefulness of our refining plant."

It is, beyond a doubt, the beginning of a great change in the method of refining. It is not possible that men like Messrs. Ramage, Beall and Briscoe, not to mention the practical men who are interested at this end, can be mistaken in the estimate they have placed on the value of the Ramage process. It is the greatest invention of the age and will go down in history as having achieved by chemistry what has been dreamed of for many years by inventors working toward this very end. Certainly the warmest congratulations are now in order and a plant will be in full running order by September 1.

Interviewed by The Courier-Gazette at his summer home, Roxmont, on the Rockport road, and asked as to the article above quoted, Mr. Law said:

"It is all true, and even more. The public announcement is a little premature, for we had not intended to advertise the matter yet, but the newspaper men, knowing in a general way what we were doing, desired to print the story. You may say that I have the fullest confidence in the new process, demonstrated by the fact that our company has secured the exclusive rights for this country and Mexico to the discovery, which I believe, as has been stated, is one of the most important ever made, and destined to work a great revolution in the industrial world."

YOUR FAVORITE POEM

ADDRESS TO THE WOODLARK.

O stay, sweet warbling woodlark, stay,
Nor quit for me the trembling spray;
A hapless lover courts thee lay,
The soothing food complaining.
Again, again that tender part,
That I may catch thy melting art;
For surely that would touch her heart,
Who kills me with disdaining.
Say, was thy little mate unkind,
And heard thee as the careless wind?
Oh, no! but love and sorrow join'd
Slept notes of woe could waken.
Thou tellest of never-ending care,
Of speechless grief and dark despair;
For pity's sake, sweet bird, no more,
Or my poor heart is broken!

 Personally appeared Frank S. Lynde, who on oath declares that he is president in the office of the Rockland Publishing Co., and that of the issue of The Courier-Gazette of August 18, 1921, there was printed a total of 5966 copies.

KNOX COUNTY'S SOLDIERS

Some of the patriotic citizens of Knox County are soon to be called upon to express their love of country in a fashion as direct as displayed by them so many times and so unselfishly during the World War. The occasion arises in connection with the encampment of the 3d Regiment of the National Guard and Coast Artillery, which will be held at Fort Williams from Sept. 1st to 15th.

Knox County furnishes to this regiment three companies of its splendid young men, some 150 of whom will be able to attend the encampment, a contribution of which our people may well be proud. In the light of this fact we believe that they will allow none of these young men to suffer any financial loss by reason of their contribution of time and effort to the just business of learning the rudiments of modern soldiering. We think the point deserves particular attention, as word comes that in some of the States employers have been encountered who discharged their men who went to camp, and in other cases docked their wages.

Adjutant General Hadley, with desire to secure all possible co-operation in this connection, took up with Judge Cleaves, executive secretary of the Associated Industries of Maine, the proposition of trying to arrange with all employers of men who are members of the National Guard and Coast Artillery, to permit such to attend the encampment, without loss of pay. The executive committee met in Portland and recommended that each employer should pay to each employee in such case the difference between the pay he will receive at camp and the amount his wages would be if he remained at his regular employment.

There are 75 corporations belonging to the Associated Industries of Maine, covering practically the industrial life of the State. The probability is that they will unanimously adopt the recommendation of the committee, with the exception of those few who state that they are to adhere to their usual custom of giving the employees a vacation with full pay.

Our notion is that every employer who has an employee enlisted in any one of Knox County's three companies of Coast Artillery is going to be glad to let him go to the encampment and allow his wages to run right along, deducting only the amount of the pay that he will receive in camp. That is what is meant by our allusion to patriotism. The National Guard is the military bulwark of our Nation. With a standing army of only 150,000 we must have in reserve a highly trained citizen soldiery. The yearly encampment of 15 days becomes therefore of the supreme importance. The young man who gives his time to it, and to the arduous drill-work throughout the year, is entitled to the enthusiastic and patriotic support of every citizen. Not to lend him the form of assistance indicated in this article would be to aim a blow not alone at the individual soldier but at our country itself.

BOLD YOUNG FISHERMEN

Tuesday morning John Moore, William Moore, Dudley Page, Osgood Gilbert, Jr., and Alfred G. Saunders went as guests of George Gilbert on a fishing trip. They left Crescent Beach at an early hour in the good boat "Sylvia D." under the guiding hand of Capt. Roy Dow, who is known as an able seaman all along the coast. All men aboard enjoyed the trip very much and came home well repaid for their efforts. Their catch consisted of about 100 of the best rock cod that have ever been caught in these parts, and they are frank enough to admit that they also fed a few.

A FREAK PULLET.

W. A. Mink of South Hope informs The Courier-Gazette that he is the owner of a pullet four months old that lays. It takes 16 of her eggs to weigh a pound. Mr. Mink rightly calls her a freak. The freak pullet editor hasn't heard of her match this season.

Rode Horseback 5,000 Miles.

The record for the longest individual ride of which an authentic account has been given is held by Lieut. Penckhof of the Russian cavalry. In 1882 he rode from his station in distant Siberia, a place with an unpronounceable name, to St. Petersburg, a distance of over 5,000 miles, in 193 days. This was more of an endurance than a speed test. Riding an ordinary pony of Siberian breed, carrying no baggage or provisions, he averaged thirty-seven miles a day and often made more than fifty-six miles a day. He rested at night. He used the same horse throughout the trip. Starting every morning at 7, he generally made but one stop for rest during the day, simply loosening the girth of his saddle while resting, but retired every night at 9. As he approached St. Petersburg after his long ride a life guard regiment with two bands met him and escorted him into the city, where he was received by the czar and knighted for his achievement.

SCORING FOR FAIR START.

East Coast Affairs Will Soon Be Managed By New Owners.—What the Decrees Provide.

Officials of the East Coast companies returned Thursday from Portland, where the District Court had confirmed the bids made at auction sale in this city the previous day. A strong spirit of optimism was in the air at the general offices on Tillson wharf, where The Courier-Gazette reporter visited them Thursday afternoon. Frank B. Fish, who is acting as treasurer for the receivers, was found in charge, and while the details of reorganization are still in a somewhat embryonic stage, he was able to say that everything was moving to the satisfaction of the new owners, and that George Bullock of New York who is to be the executive head of the new concern, would be in charge here within the week.

The reorganization plans have undergone many changes since the first tentative draft, for it has been the policy of the committee to make certain of its ground. The proposition is a big one, and the new owners propose to avoid any error or entanglement that could in any way retard the early resumption of activity.

Just when operations of a productive nature will be resumed, and how the work will be carried on, Mr. Fish was not in a position to say, but he did assert that the work would be on no such elaborate plan as before, and that the policy would be not to produce more than there was a chance of distributing. This statement carries the ring of reasonableness. Stability and not the spectacular is what the people most interested in the industry now want to see.

The terms of the court decrees provide that in the Products Company case a $25,000 deposit should be made and the sum of $269,264 in cash (this may be more or less) deposited with the receivers; also that delivery be made to the receivers for cancellation of the I. M. Taylor note for $134,200, with release of all his claims, and delivery to receivers of release of claims of the I. M. Taylor Co. Inc., of New Jersey of $179,204.13. In the Fisheries Company case, assets shall be also transferred to bidders by receivers on payment of a $25,000 deposit on account of $131,122.63 in cash and delivery of release of all claims against this company of the I. M. Taylor Co., against the defendant for $396,204.13.

The decrees in each case provide that operation of properties and all expenses in connection with date of sale and changing of title shall be chargeable to bidders.

The receivers are authorized to refrain from conveyance and transfer of property; and from cash received by them as part of the purchase price and cash on hand and in banks, the receivers shall pay expenses of administration. Bidders are to have the right to apply to the court for recommendation of any claim or lien or otherwise, and shall be entitled to have any claim re-committed when the court shall decide there is just cause. In each of the two cases, attorney's fees were named, among which is $10,000 in each for Verrill, Hale, Booth & Ives of Portland, attorneys for the receivers. Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft of New York, also for the receivers, are to receive the same amounts, and $2500 goes to Philip G. Clifford as special master.

It should be understood in the mention of attorneys' fees that $10,000 goes to each law firm mentioned, and not to each individual.

The receivers are given the right to apply to the court for permission to recommit any claim they may see fit.

About 20 attorneys for various parties were present at the hearings Wednesday, which were mostly in the nature of long conferences and discussions over the proposed decrees. Entrance of these decrees into court records was made without objection by any person present. It was explained that no claims were to be made on the part of the reorganization committee for services rendered to come out of the sale price. Instructions will be given later on the matter of disposition of two funds held by receivers, one being a fund of subscriptions to stock received since receivers took over companies' affairs and the other from sale of Steamer Arctus. The petition of receivers for discharge will be received after these matters are settled.

Judge Hale complimented the counsel for the manner in which they had handled the cases and he in turn was praised for impartial and fair supervision and jurisdiction.

The subscriptions to stock, made since the corporations went into receivership, as referred to in one of the foregoing paragraphs, relates to stock which was sold on the installment plan. The payments on such stock, which have been made since the receivers were appointed, have all been segregated, likewise the proceeds from the sale of the Arctus.

As already told in The Courier-

Gazette the new corporation (the name of which has not been decided upon), will have seven directors, two of which are to be designated by the court. The names most prominently mentioned in this connection are those of F. Lewis Cass of Lynn, Mass. and P. A. Jugerson of Medford, Mass. Both are large stock holders.

The Courier-Gazette was also correct in its exclusive announcement that holders of preferred stock in the old corporations would receive share for share of capital stock in the new concern but the plan of exchanging common stock has been altered. The holders will receive one share of capital stock for 20 shares of common stock.

The receivers, Gen. George W. Goethals of New York and Harry M. Verrill of Portland, are anxious to be relieved of their task as soon as possible. Their work has been to straighten out the tangled affairs of the two corporations, the conversion of raw material into finished product, the disposal of surplus materials, and the maintenance of the plant in as good condition as possible. There has been no purchasing of new materials; on the contrary the receivers have disposed to best advantage of valuable inventories, converting stock into cash.

The East Coast still has a few thousand cases of cut fish in storage at Portland, but everything else has been disposed of.

The reorganization committee will find clean desks, and will be in a position to proceed without embarrassments of any sort.

The fish market is showing slight improvement. It is off season with the foreign markets until December, but the domestic markets, for cured fish will begin to show improvement early in September.

Many plans have been tentatively discussed and budgets have even been prepared, but as stated at the outset, there will be no blunders made on account of undue haste.

Disconsolate seagulls, voicing their lament over the present desolate conditions on the Rockland water front, will soon be on the wing, finding their meal ticket in the resumption of the fish industry.

SLEPT ON SINKING CRAFT.

Capt. and Crew of Portland Fishing Sloop Minerva Had Narrow Escape At McLoon Wharf.

The five men who came to this port Thursday afternoon in the Portland fishing sloop Minerva got the scare of their lives early yesterday morning when they awoke to find the stern of the craft well under water, and the boat about to make a plunge for the bottom.

Capt. Charles Jordan, skipper of the fisherman, shouted a lusty alarm, and the four members of his crew tumbled out of their bunks and clambered in a half dazed condition over the side of McLoon's wharf, where the sloop was docked. Their exit was not a moment too soon, for the water closed over the deck while they were still lamenting the fact that all of their personal effects were still on board.

Capt. Jordan was lucky enough to save $105 in cash, and one of the crew saved his suitcase. William Smith of Gloucester was the last to leave the sloop and reached the top of the wharf clad in his undershirt. In this condition he hopped it to the police station, where he obtained shelter for the remainder of the night.

The other members of the crew were Donald Campbell of Boston and Frank Stanley and Reuel Norton of Portland. They were up town when the stores opened rigging out in new wearing apparel and joking one another on their unlooked for regalia and vacation.

"It's all a mystery to me," said Capt. Jordan to The Courier-Gazette reporter, when asked how it happened. "We came in at 1 o'clock Thursday afternoon with 3000 pounds of fresh fish which we had caught 18 miles southeast of Matineus Rock. We came in for a harbor, but didn't expect to spend the night in quite that fashion."

"I was awakened about 2 a. m. by the sound of rushing water. I should say there were then four feet of water over the stern, and the water was rushing through the companionway into the fore-castle."

The rest has already been told. The sloop was owned by Capt. Jordan and C. N. Trefethen of Portland. The underwriters were notified.

BODYGUARD TO CARUSO.

Frank S. Mondo, Detective Sergeant, Visiting in Thomaston, Figured in Blackhand Arrests.

Thomaston has an interesting visitor in the person of Frank S. Mondo, the New York detective sergeant, who acted as bodyguard to the world famous tenor Enrico Caruso, after the latter had been threatened with blackhand letters seven years ago. Mr. Mondo also had an important part in the capture of two of the criminals, a feat which was accomplished in a clever and dramatic manner, after the blackhand artists had gone to the stipulated spot to collect the $15,000 demanded in their letters.

The blackhanders were thoroughly armed, and would have made their captors pay a very dear price, if the surprise had not been so complete. The prisoners were sentenced to seven and one-half years in Sing Sing, but one forfeited bail, and is still at large, while the other was subsequently shot and killed.

Mondo and Caruso were fellow countrymen—Neapolitans, and between them sprang up an intimate friendship. The detective was in Caruso's New York audience as frequently as circumstances would permit and shared the popular belief that the world had no greater singer. They dined together at the Knickerbocker, and Caruso never failed to give the detective a hearty greeting wherever they met.

"Caruso had no fear, and personally did not want a bodyguard," Mr. Mondo told The Courier-Gazette reporter.

Mr. Mondo is the guest in Thomaston of Edward O. Shibles, a native of that town, who has long been connected with the New York police department. He is enjoying every minute of his stay.

WANTED IN VERMONT

Arthur Cohan, Charged With Swindling Green Mountain Folks, Arrested at Megunticook Lake.

Arthur Cohan of Mattapan, Mass., who is wanted in Newport and other Vermont cities, on the charge of obtaining money under false pretences, was arrested Thursday night at Megunticook Lake, where he was occupying a cottage with his wife and some friends. The arrest was made by Deputy Sheriffs Anderson and Orbeton, at the instigation of E. C. Brown of the James R. Wood Detective Agency of Boston, who has been on Cohan's trail for several weeks, and who will be remembered here as one of the detectives who figured in the Bradbury case several years ago.

Sheriff Everett Hill of Orleans county and State Attorney A. W. Farnham arrived last night to take charge of Cohan.

Posing as a representative of a concern known as the People's Furniture Co. of Boston, Cohan went into Vermont last summer and is alleged to have organized so-called 50-cent clubs, under the terms of which each of the supposed 60 members would pay 50 cents a week, and one would get a prize consisting of furniture or dishes valued at $30. The prizes were supposed to have been sent by the Boston Furniture Co., and were of a character which brought new club members rapidly.

At the end of the 59th week Cohan ceased to collect the dues, and members who did not receive the expected prize on the final week began an investigation which is alleged to have resulted in the exposure of a swindle whereby the club had hundreds of members in the various cities instead of 60 and the receipts had mounted well into the thousands.

"The South is looking forward to a rather tough season," writes Ralph A. Webber from Little Rock, Ark. "The price of cotton is down to 12 cents a pound. I went over a 3400 acre plantation last week, and the boll weevil had destroyed about half of the crop. The same thing prevails throughout the central South. A lot of the acreage was put to corn and sorghum. Prices are fair, but all of that crop will have to be held over. Watermelons are selling for 8 and 10 cents, some of them real ones, weighing around 30 pounds. Cantaloupes are retailing at 25 cents a dozen."

This week's mails have brought many letters and post cards from the U. S. Oklahoma, which had lately arrived at Balboa, Canal Zone, on its way to the Pacific Coast. The messages again expressed the pleasure which all of the officers and sailors experienced on their Fourth of July visit to Rockland. The Courier-Gazette was well pleased to receive a line from R. S. Revell, who wrote: "Your paper surely did speak well of the men on the Oklanoma, and I am one of many on the ship who deeply appreciate the treatment received here. I heartily thank you for your compliments to the ship." Of course there was a line from Peter Nelson, chief boatswain's mate, who never forgets old friends. He said that the ship had just arrived from Peru, and all of the men were looking forward eagerly to mail from home.

We read in some paper, the other day, a little article about a man that sold his pig for thirteen dollars. A neighbor asked him how much profit he made at that price. He said he bought the shoat at $3.00, the lumber for the pen $5.00, the grain to feed him for $5.00. Well said the friend, he cost what you sold him for, what did you get out of it. Well, he said, I had the use of the pig all summer.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Returning home after a day's shooting, Dyck Calhoun, gifted young Irish gentleman of the time of the French and American revolutions, meets Sheila Llyn, seventeen-year-old girl visiting in the neighborhood. They are mutually attracted. She does not know he is a dissipated father, Errie Boyne, her mother having divorced him and resumed her maiden name.

CHAPTER II.—Reaching home, Dyck finds Leonard Mallow, son of Lord Mallow, with a message from the attorney general summoning Miles Calhoun, Dyck's father, to Dublin.

CHAPTER III.—They go to Dublin and a duel is arranged. They fight with swords and Dyck is victor.

CHAPTER IV.—Errie Boyne, secretly in French employ, gets Dyck drunk and tries to persuade him to join in revolt against England. They quarrel and Dyck is overheard to threaten Boyne. While the former is overcome with drunken wine, Boyne's second wife enters the room and stabs her faithless husband to the heart.

CHAPTER V.—Hours later the room is entered and Dyck arrested on a charge of murder. He does not know if he killed Boyne or not, he was so muddled with the drugged wine.

CHAPTER VI.—Sheila begs her mother to go to Dublin with her to help Dyck. Mrs. Llyn opposes the idea. A letter from Mrs. Llyn's wealthy brother in America invites them to come and live with him, and they decide to go.

CHAPTER VII.—Dyck refuses to enter any plea to the charge of murder except "No Defense." He might have escaped by revealing Boyne's treachery but refuses to do so, on Sheila's account. He is sent to prison for eight years. Sheila writes Dyck, assuring him of her belief in his innocence and urging him to come to America after his prison term.

CHAPTER VIII.—Released after serving four years, Dyck is welcomed to freedom by his servant, Michael Clones, and a humble Mr. Christopher Dugan. Those two are all who care to remember him. He is practically destitute, his father dead and his estate swallowed by creditors.

CHAPTER IX.

Whither Now?

England was in a state of unrest. She had, as yet, been none too successful in the war with France. From the king's castle to the poorest slum in Seven Dials there was a temper bordering on despair. Ministries came and went; statesmen rose and fell. The army was indifferently recruited and badly paid. England's battles were fought by men of whom many were only mercenaries, with no stake in England's rise or fall.

The admiralty pursued its course of seizing men of the mercantile marine, taking them aboard ships, keeping them away from months from the harbors of the kingdom, and then, when their ships returned, denying them the right of visiting their homes. The press-gangs did not confine their activities to the men of the mercantile marine. From the streets after dusk they caught and brought in, often after ill-treatment, torn from their wives and sweethearts, knocked on the head for resisting, tradesmen with businesses, young men studying for professions, idlers, debtors, out-of-work men. The marvel is that the British fleets fought as well as they did.

Poverty and sorrow, loss and bereavement, were in every street, peeped mournfully out of every window, lurked at street corners. From all parts of the world adventurers came to renew their fortunes in the turmoil of London, and every street was a kaleidoscope of faces and clothes and colors, not British, not patriot, not national.

Among these outlanders were Dyck Calhoun and Michael Clones. They had left Ireland together in the late autumn, leaving behind them the stirrings of the coming revolution and plunging into another revolt which was to prove the test and trial of English character.

Dyck had left Ireland with ninety pounds in his pocket and many tons' weight of misery in his heart. In his bones he felt tragedies on foot in Ireland which concession and good government could not prevent. He had fled from it all. When he set his face to Holyhead, he felt that he would never live in Ireland again. Yet his courage was firm as he made his way to London, with Michael Clones—faithful, devoted, a friend and yet a servant, treated like a comrade, yet always with a little dominance.

The journey to London had been without event, yet as the coach rolled through country where frost silvered the trees; where, in the early morning, the grass was shining with dew; where the everlasting green hedges and the red roofs of villages made a picture which pleased the eye and stirred the soul, Dyck Calhoun kept wondering what would be his future. He had no profession, no trade, no skill except with his sword; and as he neared London town—when they left Hendon—he saw the smoke rising in the early winter morning and the business of life spread out before him, brave and buoyant.

As from the heights of Hampstead he looked down on the multitudinous area called London, something throbbed at his heart which seemed like hope; for what he saw was indeed inspiring. When, at last, in the Edgware road, he drew near to living London, he turned to Michael Clones and said:

"Michael, my lad, I think perhaps we'll find a footing here."

So they reached London and quartered themselves there in simple lodgings in Soho. Dyck walked the streets, and now and then he paid a visit to the barracks where soldiers were to satisfy the thought that perhaps in the life of the common soldier he might, after all, find his future. It was, however, borne in upon him by a chance remark of Michael one day—"I'm not young enough to be a recruit and you wouldn't go alone without me, would you?"—that this way to a livelihood was not open to him.

His faithful companion's remark had fixed Dyck's mind against entering the army, and then, toward the end of the winter, a fateful thing happened. His purse containing what was left of the ninety pounds—two-fifths of it—disappeared. It had been stolen, and in all the bitter days to come, when poverty and misery ground them down, no hint of the thief, no sign of the robber was ever revealed. Then, at last, a day when a letter came from Ireland. It was from the firm in which Bryan Llyn of Virginia had been interested, for the letter had been sent to their care, and Dyck had given them his address in London on this very chance. It reached Dyck's hand on the day after the last penny had been paid out for their lodgings and they faced the streets penniless, foodless—one was going to stay friendless. The handwriting was that of Sheila Llyn.

At a street corner, by a chemist's shop where a red light burned, Dyck opened and read the letter. This is what Sheila had written to him:

"My Dear Friend:
"The time is near (I understand by a late letter to my mother from an official) when you will be freed from prison and will face the world again. I have not written you since your trial, but I have never forgotten and never shall. I have been forbidden to write to you or think of you, but I will take my own way about you. I have known all that has happened since we left Ireland, through the letters my mother has received. I know that Playmore has been sold, and I am sorry."

"Now that your day of release is near, and you are to be again a free man, have you decided about your future? Is it to be in Ireland? No, I think not. Ireland is no place for a sane and level man to fight his fight for honor, fame and name. I hear that things are worse there in every way than they have been in our lifetime."

"After what has happened in any case, it is not a field that offers you a chance. Listen to me. Ireland and England are not the only places in the world. My uncle came here to Virginia a poor man. He is now immensely rich. He had little to begin with, but he was young like you—indeed, a little older than you—when he first came. He invested wisely, worked bravely, and his wealth grew fast. No man needs a fortune to start the business of life in this country. He can get plenty of land for almost nothing; he can get credit for planting and furnishing his land, and, if he has friends, the credit is sure."

"All America is ready for the likes of you. Think it over, and meanwhile please know there has been placed with the firm in Dublin money enough to bring you here with comfort. You must not refuse it. Take it as a loan, for I know you will not take it as a gift."

"I do not know the story of the killing, even as it was told in court. Well, some one killed the man, but not you, and the truth will come out in time. If one should come to me out of the courts of heaven and say that there it was declared you were a rogue, I should say heaven was no place for me. No, of one thing I am sure—you never killed an undefended man. Wayward, wanton, reckless, dissipated you may have been, but you were never depraved—never!"

"When you are free, lift up your shoulders to all the threats of time, then go straight to the old firm where the money is, draw it, take ship and come here. If you let me know you are coming, I will be there to meet you when you step ashore, to give you a firm hand-clasp; to tell you that in this land there is a good place for you, if you will win it."

"I beg you take ship for the Virginia coast. Enter upon the new life here with faith and courage. Have no fear. Heaven has thus far helped you will guide you to the end."

"I write without my mother's permission, but my uncle knows, and though he does not approve, he does not condemn."

"Once more good-bye, my dear friend, and God be with you."

"SHEILA LLYN."

"P. S.—I wonder where you will read this letter. I hope it will find you before your release. Please remember that she who writes it summons you from the darkness where you are, to light and freedom here."

Slowly Dyck folded up the letter, when he had read it, and put it in his pocket. Then he turned with pale face and gaunt look to Michael Clones.

"Michael," said he, "that letter is from a lady. It comes from her new home in Virginia."

Michael nodded.

"Aye, aye, sir, I understand you," he said. "Then she doesn't know the truth about her father?"

Dyck sighed heavily.

"No, Michael, she doesn't know the truth."

"I don't believe it would make any difference to her if she did know."

"It would make all the difference to me, Michael. She says she wishes to help me. She tells me that money's been sent to the big firm in Dublin—money to take me across the sea to Virginia."

Michael's face clouded.

"Yes, sir, to Virginia—and what then?"

"Michael, we haven't a penny in the world, you and I, but if I took one farthing of that money I should hope you would kill me. I'm hungry; we've had nothing to eat since yesterday; but if I could put my hands upon that money here and now I wouldn't touch it. Michael, it looks as if we shall have to take to the trade of the foot-pad."

CHAPTER X.

The Hour Before the Mutiny.
"How did it happen, Michael?"

As he spoke, Dyck looked round the forecastle of the Ariadne with a restless and inquisitive expression.

Michael was seated a few feet away, his head bent forward, his hands clasped around his knees.

"Well, it don't matter one way or 'nother," he replied; "but it was like this: The night you got a letter from Virginia we was penniless; so at last I went with my watch to the pawnbroker's. You said you'd wait till I got back, though you knew not where I was goin'. When I got back, you were still broodin'. You were seated on a horseblock by the chemist's lamp where you had read the letter. It was not for me to say of what you were thinkin'; but I could guess. You'd been struck hard, and there had come to you a letter from one who meant more to you than all the rest of the world; and you wouldn't answer it because things weren't right. As I stood lookin' at you, wonderin' what to do, though I had twelve shillins in my pocket from the watch I'd pawned, there came four men, and I knew from their looks they were recruitin' officers of the navy. I saw what was in their eyes. They knew—as why shouldn't they, when they saw a gentleman like you in peasant clothes?—that luck had been ag'in' us."

"How Did It Happen, Michael?"

"What the end would have been I don't know. It was you that solved the problem, not them. You looked at the first man of them hard. Then you got to your feet."

"Michael," says you quietly, 'I'm going to sea. England's at war, and there's work to do. So let's make for a king's ship, and have done with misery and poverty.'"

"Then you waved a hand to the man in command of the recruitin' gang, and presently stepped up to him and his friends."

"Sir, I said to you, 'I'm not going to be pressed into the navy.'"

"There's no pressin', Michael," you answered. "We'll be quota men. We'll do it for cash—for forty pounds each, and no other. You let them have you as you are. But if you don't want to come," you added, "it's all the same to me."

"Faith, I knew that was only talk. I knew you wanted me. Also I knew the king's navy needed me, for men are hard to get. So, when they'd paid us the cash—forty pounds apiece—I stepped in behind you, and here we are—here we are! Forty pounds apiece—equal to three years' wages of an ordinary recruit of the army. It ain't bad, but we're here for three years, and no escape from it. Yes, here we are!"

Dyck laughed.

"Aye, here we're likely to remain, Michael. There's only this to be said—we'll be fighting the French soon, and it's easy to die in the midst of a great fight. If we don't die, Michael, something else will turn up, maybe."

"That's true, sir! They'll make an officer of you, among the common herd. It's the dregs of the world that comes to the ship's bottom in time of peace or war."

"Well, I'm the dregs of the world, Michael. I'm the supreme dregs. Somehow the letter from Virginia had decided Dyck Calhoun's fate for him. Here he was—at sea, a common sailor in the navy. He and Michael Clones had eaten and drunk as sailors do, and they had realized that, as they ate and drank on the River Thames, they would not eat and drink on the watery fairway. They had seen the tank full with age, from which water was drawn for men who could not live without it, and the smell of it had revolted Dyck's senses. They had seen the kegs of pickled meat, and they had been told of the evil ravings given to the sailors at sea."

The Ariadne had been a flagship in her day, the home of an admiral and his staff. She carried seventy-four guns, was easily obedient to her swift sail, and had a reputation for gallantry. From the first hour on board, Dyck Calhoun had fitted in; with a discerning eye he had understood the seamen's needs and the weaknesses of the system.

The months he had spent between his exit from prison and his entrance into the Ariadne had roughened, though not coarsened, Dyck's outward

HAD NOT WORKED FOR MANY MONTHS

Portland Man In Dreadful Health Before Taking Tanlac—Gains 15 Pounds and Feels Fine.

"I'm now enjoying the best of health and feeling fine, and I wouldn't take anything on earth for the wonderful good Tanlac has done for me," said Fred E. Sawtelle, 102 Forest Ave., Portland, Me.

"I have gained fifteen pounds in weight and am always ready for a good day's work, but I was in awful shape before I got hold of Tanlac. Why, for three months I wasn't able to do a lick of work. I had rheumatism in my back, hips and legs, and got so bad off I was sent to a hospital for a couple of weeks, but failed to get any better. My kidneys were badly disordered, too, and at night when I lay down I would be in such pain I could scarcely sleep. There were weeks when I could hardly turn over in bed, and I was in pain and misery all the time."

"After reading so much about Tanlac and what it had done for others I decided to try it myself, and the medicine has simply made a new man of me. My rheumatism has disappeared entirely, my kidneys are in fine order and I never have an ache or pain. I sleep like a top every night and, as I said, have actually gained fifteen pounds in weight. I feel just fine in every way, and don't hesitate to give Tanlac credit for putting me in such splendid health."

appearance. From his first appearance among the seamen he had set himself to become their leader. His enlistment was for three years, and he meant that these three should prove the final success of this naval enterprise, or the stark period in a calendar of tragedy.

The life of the sailor, with its coarseness and drudgery, its inadequate pay, its evil-smelling food, its maggoty bread, its beer drawn from casks that once had held oil or fish, its stinking salt-meat barrels, the hideous stench of the bilge-water—all this could in one sense be no worse than his sufferings in jail. In spite of self-control, jail had been to him the degradation of his hopes, the humiliation of his manhood. He had suffered cold, dampness, fever, and indigestion there, and it had sapped the fresh fiber of life in him.

From the moment Dyck arrived on board the Ariadne he was a marked man. Ferens, a disfranchised solicitor, who knew his story, spread the unwholesome truth about him among the ship's people, and he received attentions at once offensive and flattering. The best educated of the ship's hands approached him on the grievances with which the whole navy was stirring.

Something had put a new spirit into the life of his majesty's ships; it was, in a sense, the reflection of the French Revolution and Tom Paine's "Age of Reason." What the Americans had done in establishing a republic, what France was doing by her revolution, got into the veins and minds of some men in England, but it got into the veins and minds of the sailor first; for, however low his origin, he had intercourse not given to the average landsman. He visited foreign ports, he came in touch with other elements than those of British life and character.

Of all the ships in the navy the Ariadne was the best that Dyck Calhoun could have entered. Her officers were humane and friendly, yet firm; and it was quite certain that if mutiny came they would be treated well. The agitation on the Ariadne in support of the grievances of the sailors was so moderate that, from the first, Dyck threw in his lot with it. Ferens, the former solicitor, first came to him with a list of proposals, which only repeated the demands made by the agitators at Spithead.

"You're new among us," said Ferens to Dyck. "You don't quite know what we've been doing. I suppose. Some of us have been in the navy for two years, and some for ten. There are men on this ship who could tell you stories that would make your blood run cold—take my word for it. There's a lot of things goin' on that oughtn't to be goin' on. The time has come for reform."

"Things are movin', and we've got to take our stand now when the time is ripe for it, or else lose it forever. Over at Spithead they're gettin' their own way. The government are goin' to send the admiralty board down here, because our admirals says to them that it won't be safe goin' unless they do."

"And what are we going to do here?" asked Dyck. "What's the game of the fleet at the North?"

Ferens replied in a low voice: "Our men are goin' to send out petitions—to the admiralty and to the house of commons."

"Why don't you try Lord Howe?"

"He's not in command of a fleet now. Besides, petitions have been sent him, and he's taken no notice."

"Howe? No notice—the best admiral we ever had! I don't believe it," declared Dyck savagely. "Why, the whole navy believes in Howe. They haven't forgotten what he did in '94. He's as near to the seamen as the seamen is to his mother. He's a big enough friend of the sailor to waste no time before doing his turn."

Ferens shook his head morosely.

Dinner was served at 3 o'clock. In the evening Mr. Blunt invited his friends and comrades Mr. Philbrick and his nephew and niece Ralph and Jessie Conant of Rockland, who furnished an abundance of fine music which carried the older members of the party back to the days of their youth. Mr. Philbrick is what is termed an old-fashioned violinist, and when they started the old-time waltz it made some of the party wild. Other friends called with beautiful flowers and presents. APPLETON

Wednesday was an ideal picnic day and long to be remembered was the community picnic under the auspices of the Sunday school, on the shore of the beautiful Sennebec lake. Early in the day autos and teams were busy carrying happy families and heavily laden baskets to the scene. Friend greeted friend beneath the pines overlooking the lake. The boys and girls played in the sparkling waters while four boats were kept busy by the young people. As the picnic grounds were on the farm of Andrew Bean, Mrs. Bean and Mrs. Elizabeth Newbert with their work aprons on were to be found making the fish chowder. Mrs. Newbert superintending. At noon three sturdy men bore the heavy kettles of the piping hot chowder, "such as mother used to make," to the bountifully laden tables—a feast not soon to be forgotten by the 100 guests. A roaring fire later was kindled on the beach and the annual old-time corn roast was enjoyed. The community at large are very grateful to all who worked so hard to make the affair successful. To those who donated boats and autos and to Mr. Bean, many thanks are extended.

MARRIED SIXTY-FOUR YEARS.

Mr. and Mrs. William A. Tripp of South Thomaston Who Last Wednesday Reached the 64th Anniversary of Their Wedded Career.

All but one of their eight surviving children gathered Wednesday at the old homestead of William A. Tripp in South Thomaston, when that venerable citizen and his aged wife celebrated their 64th wedding anniversary. It was necessary to put many new leaves in the family dining table for the sons and daughters were accompanied by their families—the whole representing a four-generation group which would have numbered eight children, 19 grandchildren and 11 great grandchildren had all been present.

But the family has many good cooks and good providers so there was an abundance of appetizing food. Even after this notable gathering of 30 persons had risen from its repast.

The afternoon and evening were spent in a very happy manner, and the couple received numerous presents in addition to floral and postcard remembrances.

Mr. and Mrs. Tripp were married in the house on Franklin street, Rockland, now owned by the family of the late J. R. Baker, but have lived in their present home nearly all the time since their marriage in 1857.

Mr. Tripp, at 88 has the distinction of being oldest male resident of South Thomaston, hence the recipient of the same offered by a Boston newspaper to such citizens, is the last survivor of a family which numbered more than a score of children from three marriages. In his day he was one of the most skillful house and ship carpenters in this locality, playing his vocation when shipbuilding was numbered among the industries of South Thomaston as well as in other seaport towns of Knox county. He also spent several seasons in Virginia, cutting ship timber. Mr. Tripp is a member of the South Thomaston Masonic Lodge, and has been a lifelong supporter of the Democratic cause.

He has held numerous town offices, and has done his full share of political work for the cause of democracy.

Mrs. Tripp's maiden name was Sabra Pitcher. She is 81 and a native of Cushing. Her lifelong interest has been centered on her home life. At the age of 72 she underwent the amputation of her left hand, but in spite of this great ordeal she has enjoyed good health for the most part. She is keen of hearing and has excellent eyesight, using glasses only for the purpose of reading.

Mr. Tripp has always been very active until a few months ago. Last year his garden was one of the best in the community. He has never found any other diversion which gave him so much satisfaction as reading, and few men of his age have kept so well posted in the events of the day.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Tripp are Mrs. Mary Adams, Mrs. Ephraim Perry and W. Stewart Tripp of Rockland, George Tripp of Augusta, Miss Lizzie Tripp of Boston, Mrs. William Jackson, who occupies the old homestead, Mark Tripp of Ash Point, Rev. J. Woodbury Tripp of Richmond, Vt., an Episcopal rector. Death has caused but one break in the family.

The grandchildren are Mrs. Walter Kirkpatrick, Rockland; Mrs. Arthur Moody, Portland; Sumner Perry, Rockland; Mrs. Earl Barron, Rockland; Ira Perry, Portsmouth; Clarence Jackson, Malden, Mass.; Maynard Jackson, Rockland; Mrs. Joseph Baum, South Thomaston; Leroy and Samuel Jackson, South Thomaston; Lloyd Tripp, Boston; Mrs. Pearl Robertson, Rockland; Margaret Tripp, Ash Point; Leslie Tripp, Sanford; Sadie Tripp, Boston; Frederick Tripp, Rockland; Norman, Barbara and Frederick Tripp of Richmond, Vt.

The great grandchildren are Waldo, Francis, Helen, and Elizabeth Kirkpatrick of Rockland; Ruth Perry of Rockland, Parker and Beverly Jackson of Rockland, Ruth Huston of South Thomaston, Alice Baum of South Thomaston, Margaret, Robertson of Rockland and Pauline Tripp of Sanford.

A number of interesting snapshots were made Wednesday, some showing the four generation groups and some taking the happy party, en masse.

REACH—DEER ISLE

Wednesday Capt. Allie Green and chief pilot Mrs. Green in the Grayling took a party of 18 from Oakhurst Farm in vicinity to Gort's Island on a picnic excursion. The weather was sunny and cool and the trip was made in fast time. When near the island lines were cast overboard and some fine cod secured for a chowder. The dinner on the rock was a great success as the chowder was made by a famous Boston chef, who was one of the party. In the afternoon the party divided, some going for cranberries and others on exploring trips over the island. The weather held good all day and every one had a fine time. The members of the party were: Mr. and Mrs. Wellington Torrey, son Wellington, Jr. and grandson Frederic Stoddard, Mr. and Mrs. S. S. Foster and guest G. M. THE PAST WEEK IN REVIEW

The Courier-Gazette's Brief Glance At the Most Important Things Engaging the World's Attention.

Taxes and Tariff

Taxes and tariff have been the dominant themes in both branches of Congress the past week. The Senate Finance Committee agreed to eliminate the dye embargo provisions from the tariff bill; and the Republican members of the House changed the tax revision bill so that the proposed repeal of the excess profits tax and the income surtax rates in excess of 32 per cent would not take effect until next January, instead of being retroactive to January 1, 1921. The effect of these changes, if retained, would be to result in the corporation and individuals with large incomes paying to the Government in the next calendar year something over $200,000,000 more than if the original proposals had been retained.

General Wood for the Philippines

Major General Leonard Wood, head of the mission to the Philippines, has been asked by President Harding to accept the post of Governor-General there—a position for which he is especially fitted by his previous service there, and his knowledge of the people. His service as Military Governor of Cuba, from 1899 to 1902, is an added qualification. But he is embarrassed in his consideration of the proposed appointment of the fact that he had previously promised to accept the Presidency of the University of Pennsylvania, and the officers and students of that institution had been looking forward with satisfaction to his entering upon the duties of that office this autumn. The complication will probably be solved by the University giving him a year's leave of absence to permit him to take, temporarily, the Philippine post.

Referendum of Railroad Brotherhoods

A referendum of the "Big Four" Railroad brotherhoods and the Switchmen Union of North America to determine their attitude on the wage reductions ordered by the United States Railway Labor Board is contemplated. The ballots must be sent out to the membership before September 1, and it will take a month to complete the balloting. Four propositions, all of which have been submitted to the Executives of the Eastern roads and rejected by them, will be included in the balloting. That the wage reductions already ordered be recalled; that no reduction be required or sought; that no effort be made to take time and one-half pay away from the members; and that for a fixed period no attempt be made to cancel or change present schedules or working rules.

Important Day for Ireland

August 16 was an important day in the history of Ireland. The conferences and letters between the Irish Republican leader and Premier Lloyd George seemed to have reached a hopeless impasse when the former, Eamonn de Valera, insisted on complete independence and the latter refused to go farther than the grant of a dominion form of government. Thereupon the Sinn Féin Parliament—the Dail Eireann—met at Dublin, August 16 to determine what action should be taken. It was generally felt that the complete rejection of Lloyd George's proposal, and adherence to the program of full independence or nothing, meant nothing less than a resumption, on a larger scale, of the guerrilla warfare which so terrified the country prior to the recent truce.

A GOOD LOBSTER LAW

So Says This Writer Who Has Fished For 35 Years.

Editor of The Courier-Gazette:—This is in answer to the letter written to your paper by "A Former Maine Man." I think the lobster law is now as it should be, without any change. Having been a lobster fisherman for 35 years and I feel that I should have a good idea of what the law ought to be.

As for the "summer people" being allowed to catch lobsters, I think most of them are able to buy the lobsters they eat, without working for them. As to the lightkeepers—they say the second assistant keeper gets only $824.25 and a bonus. Well, what does the head keeper get? I think his salary is a very good one and I am sure I could live on it, as everything is clear. The lobster fisherman has a lot to pay out for his gear, gasoline, etc. I also have fished around an island with a lighthouse on it and have seen as many "shorts" taken ashore and eaten there as at any other place I know of. How many lobster fishermen are there that can make $824.25

Silesian Settlement Deferred

The meeting of the Allied Supreme Council at Paris, to which reference was made in this column last week, was not successful in settling the long-standing dispute about Upper Silesia. There was no actual breach between the Allies, but the British and Italian representatives took one point of view, and the French the other; and finally, hopeless of reaching an agreement, the Council referred the whole question to the League of Nations. This action was taken by a unanimous vote, and it was probably hastened by the fact that Premier Lloyd George was obliged to return to England to take up new phases of the Irish question. A difficult element in the Silesian situation is the fact that, in the recent plebiscite, most of the towns were German and most of the villages Polish, and it is almost impossible to draw boundary lines which recognize this division.

Another French Disappointment

The French representatives and people, who were greatly disappointed by the failure of the Council to adjust the Silesian question, which, from the French point of view, is vital to the security of France, met with a second disappointment in the ruling of the Inter-Allied Finance Conference, August 13, under which, if approved by the Allied Governments, France will not receive a penny of the first billion marks gold paid by Germany. The Conference decided that England should have 600,000,000 gold marks out of the first billion paid by Germany, and the Belgium should have the rest on the priority account provided in the treaty; but that France, in lieu of cash, should be credited with the total value of the coal which she may mine in the Sarre Basin during the fifteen years in which she holds it. France is in sore need of ready cash, and this substitution of coal as yet unmined is a bitter blow.

The Russian Famine

No one disputes the seriousness or extent of the Russian famine, and all the accounts of the suffering of the stricken population, trying desperately to reach help, and perishing by the thousand on the way, are most harrowing. The outside world, the United States particularly, is ready to give generous aid, and has organized relief bureaus and commissions to the end; but it is greatly handicapped in the work by the refusal of the Soviet Government to give adequate protection to the workers, or to guarantee that the funds contributed and the supplies sent shall not be requisitioned for Soviet purposes. The Soviet Government professes to fear that the relief movement may prove to be only an anti-Soviet propaganda.

War Extravagance in England

The report of the Committee on Public Accounts, published in London on August 15, calls attention to Government waste and extravagance which curiously resemble the performances of our Shipping Board and some of the departments at Washington. The British Treasury sanctioned payments of large sums for purposes not authorized by Parliament; it made large gifts of public property to Allied Powers and to the Dominions—such as the warship Encounter, with guns and stores, and three mine-sweepers, and two submarine engines to the Australian navy, and two submarines with torpedoes to Canada, and certain hulls to an Allied government; three million pounds in surplus army stores to Poland; eighteen million pounds worth of stores to Russia; and surplus airplanes and parts to Greece, the Dominions and India.

EMPIRE THEATRE

Frank Mayo's admirers—and their name is legion—will today see him in the powerful role of a Wall Street broker who has married a woman who believes herself above him social superior. Of dominating personality he refuses to allow her to leave his home, but, caring for her happiness, plans to set her free, provided that the man she really loves should meet with his approval. The man in question is Ray Ripley, who is discovered to be already married. The young wife finally admits that she has been too proud and there is a happy ending—adv.

CENTRAL MAINE FAIR

The heavens will be lighted up like a war front when the mammoth fireworks display is staged in connection with the night show of the coming Central Maine Fair at Waterville, Aug. 29 to Sept. 2.

As a result of the war many new and weird color schemes have been introduced by firework manufacturers, according to officials of the firm from which the fair has purchased its fireworks. Billions of dollars worth of fireworks. Billions of dollars the war, and many secrets unknown to the trade up to that time were revealed.

"If you want to hear a repeated chorus of 'Ah's and 'Oh's,' pay a visit to the fireworks show at the coming fair," said Secretary R. M. Gilmore, today. "We have found that fireworks please everyone. It is the one entertainment feature on the program that pleases father, mother and the children, alike. The crowd never tires of watching the sky-rockets and giant shells burst in the air."

A crew of experts will be sent to prepare the set pieces and prepare each evening's fireworks program. Many of the "sets" and giant bombs to be exploded, are dangerous for anyone but a trained person to handle. Every precaution will be taken to prevent spectators from crowding onto the field when the show is being fired. The entertainment and educational program of the fair is the biggest one ever given. Large premiums are offered for all kinds of educational exhibits. Some splendid herds of cattle are to be shown. A premium book selling about the $9,155.50 prizes offered for the best educational exhibits will be mailed to anyone writing to Secretary Gilmore.

WILL JOIN THE DODO

Chicago Jewelers See Finish Of The Wrist Watches—Other Trade Predictions.

Wrist watches, popularized by the World War, have joined the Dodo bird, says a Chicago despatch to the International News Service. In a few years they will be entirely extinct, Chicago jewelers called before the Cook County Tax Board of Review predicted. Even now they have no sale. Other facts brought out at the Board of Review hearings were: Diamonds are about to advance in price, after a drop of 20 per cent in value. There is a ten per cent decline in the price of watches and silverware.

Engagement rings show an alarming falling off of at least 75 per cent. Lavallieres are being discarded for bar pins.
