HERE COMES THE BAND

Community Chautauqua Has Green's Famous Organization a Leading Feature This Season.

Next week is Community Chautauqua Week in Rockland and a better entertainment than ever before is scheduled to be held in the big brown tent on the Y. M. C. A. lot, corner of Limerock and Union streets.

Always one of the great favorites of Community Chautauqua programs in all parts of the country is Green's Band. Charles E. Green, the conductor, is one of the finer band conductors of the day.

Green makes a band to vie with a symphony orchestra. He lifts wind instruments out of noisemaking devices to the creation of as delicate effects as any stringed orchestra might create. That is what made Sousa famous. That is why Edwin Frank Goldman is now doing so well in New York City. Yet there are always the martial strains, the marktime march music which gets your feet wiggling about and you ready to get up and yell!

Conductor Green has made his programs to fit in with Greater Chautauqua plans. In the afternoon he has a "Pop" concert, for a Family Party event. At night he has a program that is of exceptional merit. The tuneful Raymond Overture of Ambroise Thomas will set things going, there will be a medley of beautiful sacred music, a melodic serenade of Tite, and, of course, there will be rousing music of the type of Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever."

At the time that President Harding was notified of his nomination, Mr. Green was delegated to reorganize and conduct the band in which Mr. Harding played as a young man and which was known as "Harding's Own Band." Among many bands this one, under Mr. Green's direction, was the outstanding feature of the festivities in connection with the notification.

Among the members of this organization are men who have played solo positions with the leading bands of America. You will not want to miss the baritone solo by Noble Howard, who for the past two seasons has played solo baritone with Arthur Pryor's Band, who is the director of the Murat Temple Shrine Band in Indianapolis. The cornet duet of Messrs. Henry and Williams is another number that will delight you.

Pasquale Montani, who is featured as the harp soloist with Green and his Band, is of American birth, but of Italian parentage. He is of a family of seven brothers, all of whom are musicians. He is a most accomplished harpist who, while playing classical numbers with a marvelous technique and understanding, makes them as enjoyable as the well-known and more simple ballad numbers which he also uses.

Not only does Green and his Band make a feast for the ear. But they, pictorially, are perfect. The uniforms are striking. The instruments are beautiful to look upon. The harp and xylophone are themselves majestic instruments. The stage is set in royal purple hangings.

The afternoon concert is a "pop" affair. That is, it is what the big city concertmakers announce for the greater crowds than those who just go to the classical offerings.

But this pop concert is a Family Party. Mother and daughter, father and son, are urged to attend, and discuss certain things. This program will relate back to Isaacson's afternoon and evening. Here will be a chance to try out some of the things he tells about. What does music mean? What does it do to you? For instance, what are the ideas which come to father and son in the beautiful "Largo" of the New World Symphony. Seemingly this name means nothing. But with Isaacson's ideas and Green's music, and the discussion which father and son will have, this will begin to assume larger proportions than the whole tent.

There's nothing like singing to get out all the grouch, sulkiness, anger, tiredness. Singing is the greatest tonic in the world. You don't need to be a singer. Oh, no matter how bad you are at singing, the whole ensemble sounds fine. It isn't a question of singing at all. But fun, and if here isn't democracy, there isn't any anywhere!

Charles T. Smalley, who attended "Shriners' Day" at Bangor last Friday, comments on the fine stretch of road between Rockland and Belfast now that the new stretch at Brown's Corner is nearly completed. For that matter it is pretty good sailing for motorists from Camden to Searsport.

SO THIS IS ROCKLAND

GLIMPSE NUMBER THREE

Here is a gem of a small home, Colonial style, owned by E. S. May and situated at 29 High street. This design was accepted by The House Beautiful Magazine in its prize contest for small homes run in 1916. Schack & McAllister of Seattle, Wash., were the architects.

The base of the house is 30x28 feet with a fine cellar 7½ feet in the clear. This kitchen is in white enamel throughout with a Roper enamel gas range and white porcelain sink with set tubs attached. Hot water is supplied by a Sands automatic gas heater. The ironing board sets in the wall and there are numerous outlets for electrical appliances.

Two sleeping rooms each 12x12 and a den 10x10 feet besides a tiled

The High Street Home of Mr. and Mrs. E. S. May.

All the roof draining is carried off through the sewer and all wires running to the house are in conduits. A section of the cellar is set off as a cold room by a heavy brick partition. In the cellar too is located the work bench of the master of the house.

The front alcove entrance has cement flooring and opens into the hall which is part of the 22x13 foot living room running the length of the house and opening through French doors into the 8x10 foot sun parlor. A large fireplace on the center side is a handsome addition.

The dining room, 12x12 feet, opens into the living room and kitchen. enamel bath room constitute the second floor. The hall staircase is in oak and has a graceful approach from the hall. All the floors are oak and the finish is in pine, semi-enamelled.

C. E. Goulding was the builder with Oliver F. Hills contractor for excavating the cellar. E. Howard Crockett did the plumbing and heating (hot air pipe furnace); House & Sherman the wiring; A. O. Butler, chimney and plastering; Charles Oakes, concrete work; Clifford Goulding painting; W. H. Glover Co., mill work; Fred A. Blackington, grading and George Mugridge awnings.

THE MYSTIC SHRINERS

Had Fine Time In Bangor and Look Forward To Another In Lewiston.

Friday was "Shriners' Day" at the Bangor Fair, and Knox County's Nobles were present in goodly numbers.

Arriving at the park the shriners were greeted with a salute of aerial bombs as they reached the grand stand after circling the park, they were given a rousing greeting by the occupants of the stand. The parade was marshalled by Sheriff Fernandez and the order of the procession was as follows: Patrol of police led by Capt. Walter Holmes; Anah Temple Band; Anah Patrol and Divan; Imperial Potentate James E. Chandler of Kansas City, Mo., Imperial Recorder Benjamin W. Rowell of Boston, Imperial First Ceremonial Master Esten Fletcher of Syracuse, N. Y., and Past Supreme Potentate J. Putnam Stevens of Portland, in automobiles, Anah and visiting nobles, Anah Drum Corps and the candidates.

The Imperial officers were escorted to seats in the boxes and were introduced to the assemblage, receiving a hearty greeting. Among the out of state temples represented in the parade and at the ceremonial were Ararat of Kansas City, Mo., Damascus of Syracuse, N. Y., Aleppo of Boston, Abdallah of Levensworth, Kansas, Luxor of St. John and Kora of Lewiston, a large delegation being in attendance from the latter temple.

* * * *

Knox County Shriners are looking forward to another big day one week from Thursday, when many of them will attend the State Fair ceremonial in Lewiston. Imperial Potentate James E. Chandler of Kansas City will be a guest. This event is therefore considered one of the highlights in Shrine circles this year. Noble Clarence M. Dunbar, Palestine temple, Providence, R. I., who is Imperial Assistant Rabban, will accompany Potentate to Lewiston and Noble George M. Hendee, Springfield, Mas., chairman of the building committee of the New England unit of the Shriners' hospital for crippled children will also be a guest.

The Nobility of Kora will have the pleasure of being entertained for the first time by Kora's new organ. The recital will be given by one of Kora's talented artists. The program for the day's event is contained in an attractive pamphlet which contains many things of special interest to members of the order. In the center of the booklet are the pictures of all the past potentates of Kora Temple since its founding. Mention is made of the pilgrimage to Atlantic City.

BULLETINS FOR TEACHERS

Publications and other materials of all Federal Departments useful to teachers are listed for the first time in a bulletin just issued by the Bureau of Education of the Department of the Interior. The materials listed include bulletins, leaflets, circulars, periodicals, maps, charts, mounted exhibits, models, stereopticon slides, and moving picture films. This listing by sources of the wealth of material readily available through the Federal Government Departments will be very helpful to the educational world as few know the nature of the available material or the method of obtaining it. The bulletin is freely illustrated, reproducing types of the material available. Persons desiring the bulletin should address the Commissioner of Education, Department of the Interior Washington, D. C., asking for Bulletin 1924, No. 23.

FINE GOLF SCORING

Playing in a three ball match with Major William and Mr. Baker, Ernest W. Newnham, pro of the Samoset Hotel course, set a new record for the nine holes. With one hole over par and four birdies, Newnham brought in a card that showed a 33 for the round. The previous record of the hotel course was 34. The par of the course is 36.

Mr. Newnham also holds the record of the Rockland Country Club, on whose course he got a 32.

Mr. Newnham is entering the Maine State open which is to be held at Poland Sept. 3 and 4 and his many friends certainly wish him good luck.

PARKING ON HIGHWAYS

One of the Most Dangerous Things Connected With Motoring.

Parking automobiles on public highways is strongly condemned as a public nuisance by the American Automobile Association, according to a bulletin just released through the organization's Touring and Transportation board at Washington, D. C.

The basis for the A.A.A. action is numerous complaints received from tourists who have been both inconvenienced and endangered by persons who park their cars on the main highways when they could just as well drive on to a cross road or open space, it is stated.

In its bulletin the board states that it does not sympathize with the motorist who thinks he would forfeit a privilege if forbidden to park on highways because it contends that he is not safe in parking where there is high speed traffic and that he really would benefit by being compelled to park in safer places.

Thos. P. Henry, president of the A.A.A., says that the number of accidents resulting from parking cars an heavily traveled highways offsets any possible advantages and that if the motorist does not appreciate the importance of parking safely legislation must step in to produce desired results.

"It is hoped that this appeal to the motorist, however, will obviate the necessity for adding another law to the already overcrowded statutes," Mr. Henry explains. "If each motorist would act upon the recommendations of the A.A.A. board the highways would be safer for all who use them and the nuisance of unsafe parking would be minimized."

The following suggestions have been offered by the A.A.A. board:

"Do not seek main highways for picnic purposes. Use the secondary roads where there are plenty of opportunities for parking off the road.

"In event of puncture try to get the car as far off the traveled portion of the road as possible before changing the tire, and in no case stop on a curve or near the top of a hill.

"Never stop opposite a car that has parked along the road. If you want to ask your way stop your car at least one hundred and fifty feet beyond and walk back to inquire.

"You are not safe sitting in your car while it is parked on a highway. Furthermore you are a source of danger to those who are obliged to turn out to pass you.

"If you turn into a blind driveway to park have the back of the car to the main road. When your car is facing the road motorists may think you are just driving into the road. They may make a sudden stop before discovering that your car is not in motion and cars following them may be forced into a series of rear-end collisions.

"Parking a car at night on a main highway is doubly dangerous. You never know what minute the tail light may burn out."

WOULD SURPRISE OLDTIMERS

If They Could See What Used To Be Called "The Flat Ledge," Clark Island.

J. B. Felt, secretary of the Granite Cutters' Union at Clark Island, reports thus to the Quarry Workers' Journal:

"We held our regular meeting on the third Thursday of the month, with a very poor attendance. I think there ought to be something done to see if the boys will not attend meetings once a month. We have about 80 members in the branch and only about a dozen attending meeting, so boys, brace up and come to meetings.

"This company has about 100 paving cutters working here now. If some of the old settlers should come back and see what was called the flat ledge they would be some surprised. We have three locomotives and two air compressors so you see we are right up-to-date. The company has shipped a load of paving and we have a barge here loading now. Will close by hoping to see more of the boys turn out at the next meeting."

THE vegetables we serve here in such appetizing style come fresh from the farms to our kitchen and are served at your table in appetite-appealing manner. This restaurant will help you enjoy life.

COMING TO STRAND THEATRE

HOT FROM THE BAT

Was the Address of Gen. Dawes, Vice Presidential Nominee, At Island Park—Maine Situation As a Newspaper Man Sees It.

Hon. Charles G. Dawes, Republican nominee for Vice President addressed a magnificent Republican gathering at Island Park, near Augusta Saturday.

He was introduced to the crowds as a "hater of shams," and he proceeded to make good at once by refusing to hide behind generalities in talking on a ticklish question.. Dawes came to his decision early Saturday morning, when newspapers brought on board his train at Portland informed him that Pattangall had challenged him to state his position and that of President Coolidge on the Klan. To the newspaper men present he said that he would not answer Pattangall's " trick questions," but that if the country at large and Maine, in particular, really wanted to know where he stood, he would not hesitate to tell them.

He had planned to go straight to Augusta, but when the car reached Brunswick he decided to remain there for several hours to "polish off" what he would tell the voters. He rehearsed his speech while strolling through the beautiful grounds of Bowdoin College, and then went to a hotel and dictated it to a stenographer. At Island Park he read it from the manuscript, word for word.

Word that Dawes had decided to name the Klan and discuss it reached Augusta in mid-forenoon and caused considerable stir in the lobby of the Augusta House, where members of the Republican State committee were assembling for a formal meeting. Most of them at once jumped to the conclusion that Dawes had "fallen into Pattangall's trap."

Senator Ralph O. Brewster of Portland, the Republican candidate for Governor, whose refusal to repudiate the support which the Klan gave him in the primaries campaign projected the issue, followed Dawes on the platform, and although the headliner of the day had had his say the crowd remained intact, wondering if Brewster would depart from his own studied policy of refusing to mention the Klan by name.

If they anticipated anything of this nature they were disappointed, for Brewster adhered closely to his prepared address. He did consider it necessary to read again that section of the Maine constitution which guarantees religious liberty, in that way indicating that he thought the issue worth more than the generalities of his prepared speech. The constitution is Brewster's answer to the charge that he is sympathetic with the Klan, but he had not referred to it, directly or indirectly, since the first speech he made in the campaign.

Senator Frank G. Farrington of Augusta, whom Brewster defeated in the primary, was the presiding officer, and he sounded the keynote of the campaign when he declared that the Republican party expected the loyalty of all its members in the coming election.

"Loyalty knows no compromise, it is absolute or it is nothing," he said, and the crowd cheered, knowing that in those words he was urging everybody to vote the straight ticket.

* * * *

Gen. Dawes denied the assertion of John W. Davis that the Klan is an issue of itself in the campaign, insisting that he was discussing it only because it emphasized the greatest issue, that of adherence to our constitutional form of government. He said he was not answering the "trick questions" of Pattangall, because they did not deserve the dignity of an answer.

He sketched in outline some of the excuses which have brought the Klan into being, lawlessness of one form or another and its appeal to adventurous youth. He discussed the Walton case in Oklahoma, the Herrin massacre, and the individual case of a bootlegger in Illinois, and pointed out that in each instance the issue had died as soon as the people returned to law and order and the letter and spirit of the constitution. He showed how the lawlessness of the Klan had invited lawlessness on the part of its opponents, and shouted: "Lawlessness cannot be met with lawlessness if civilization is to be maintained."

On the religious side, he went on, the Klan cannot be defended. He pointed out the guarantees of religious freedom which our government has always given, and said that the injection of religious questions into politics is contrary to the will of the people and to the letter and spirit of the constitution of the United States.

Without interruption he plunged into the speech which he had prepared earlier in the week, in the main, an answer to attacks on the Republicans made by John W. Davis at Clarksburg. He ridiculed the assertion that the individual "dereliction" of the Republican office holder justified the people in throwing the party out of power. He supplied the homely example of the man who finds a defective part on his automobile, but who does not take the advice of the eager automobile salesman to junk the whole car and buy a new one.

He admitted he had been accused of unfriendliness to labor, but said that his views had been distorted, that he opposed crooked and lawbreaking labor leaders, but he had only admiration for the great body of trades unionists. Answering the accusation that he is an advocate of the "open shop," he declared that no political party had any right to declare in its platform for the "open shop" or against collective bargaining, because the Supreme Court of the United States had confirmed the right of American workingmen to organize and to bargain collectively.

Then he came to foreign affairs. He said that Davis and the Democratic party are trying to lead the nation back to the "fog bank" of 1920, with a referendum "for which there is neither law nor procedure, to ascertain whether the people have changed their minds." He said that America does not send official representative to Europe because the United States Senate will not permit, and as he reached this passage, highly critical of the Senate, he turned to Senators Hale and Fernald on the platform behind him, and with a low bow, said: "Pardon me, senators, while I make this statement."

He said that if the Davis policy of no unofficial participation had been followed, Europe would not be today finding its way out of the post-war chaos into the bright light of a Christian peace.

He declared that this campaign is between Coolidge on one side and the La Follette-Socialist coalition, under the red flag on the other. Following the language of his Evanston speech, he declared that the Democratic party, having attempted to straddle this issue, would meet the fate of all who try to straddle.

"We have had abnormal times," he said in conclusion. "We have had lax law enforcement, and the people are beginning to look at the ground under their feet. Do we stand on that rock, the constitution of the United States? That is what the issue in this campaign means. Let me say here to you politicians of Maine: Lift your eyes above petty politics and above petty office to the flag of your country. Upon this proposition I undertake to say where the pine tree state stands. What is your motto? 'I lead.' "

Fred Owen's Analysis

One of the keenest political observers in the States is Fred K. Owen, the well known Portland newspaper man. What he thinks about the Maine situation is consequently worthy of considerable attention. In the Portland Sunday Telegram he thus reviewed the situation:

How many votes will Senator Brewster have to have to be elected governor of Maine on Monday, September 8, if he is elected? How many will Mr. Pattangall have to have if he is to be chosen as some of his supporters affect to believe that he will be?

Of course no man can answer that question definitely for nobody knows yet how many of the voters of Maine are going to the polls Sept. 8. But all are permitted to guess. As a basis of this guessing it is generally conceded that the total vote to be thrown this year will be considerably larger than has been cast in this State in any previous election.

The primary reason for expecting a record breaking vote is the general interest that has been manifested in politics during this campaign by all citizens. It is interest of course that brings out the vote and citizens are interested.

The Republicans have had few public rallies as yet, but the crowds that have attended the whirlwind tour meetings have been twice as large as they were two or even four years ago when this form of campaigning was inaugurated by Gov. Parkhurst. The attendance at the Republican State and county organization meetings has also been unprecendently large in many cases there having been a hundred percent attendance of members. Chairman Emery says that in the organization tours he has seen representatives from every town in this State save four small places and the representatives of one of these towns missed by his automobile ceasing to function. This must be a record.

The interest in the Democratic meetings has perhaps not been as great, but it has been good. Mr. Pattangall draws well because people like to hear him talk, whether they agree with him or not. He has had bigger meetings than ever this year. Whatever may be the cause of it, it is true then that not in years has there been as great interest in politics as so far in this campaign.

* * * *

Another reason for expecting a big vote is that the women of both parties are better organized this year than ever they have been before. Four years ago when women first voted, Mr. Parkhurst the Republican candidate for Governor, got the jump on his Democratic opponents by taking steps to have the women voters organized before the other side thought of it.

But the Democrats have not been remiss in this respect this year. The women workers in the party began their work a year ago and they have not relaxed their efforts since then. It is probable that the Democratic women of Maine were never better organized than they are at this time. There are some talented women in the party and they are workers.

Finally there is always a bigger vote in Maine during Presidential years than in the so-called off years.

Assuming then that the vote this year will be a record breaker, by how much will all other totals be exceeded?

The largest vote ever cast in the State was thrown four years ago when Mr. Parkhurst was the candidate for Governor, against Bertrand McIntire who is now candidate for Congress in the Second District. This was the first year that women voted. Mr. Parkhurst had 135,393 votes that year to 70,047 for McIntire, a total of 205,440. The Parkhurst majority was nearly 66,000, the largest a candidate for Governor in Maine had ever received. The following fall the vote for President was nearly as large, Harding having 135,355, 500 more than Parkhurst, and Co. 69,603.

Two years ago the total vote fell off considerably, although no more than is normal in off years. Mr. Pattangall, who was the Democratic candidate for Governor received 70,047, slightly more than had been cast for McIntire, and Governor Baxter 103,713, 32,000 less than Parkhurst. The total was 178,969.

There is every reason to believe that this fall's vote will be considerably larger than that of four years ago for the causes that we have named. It might be a fair estimate that it will be 30,000 larger, making the total 235,000. If this guess should prove to be approximately correct it follows that the winning candidate will have to have one more than half of that total or 118,000 approximately. This would not be as large as Parkhurst was given four years ago, but is 15,000 larger than Baxter got in 1922.

In order to win, then, Mr. Pattangall must increase his vote of two years ago, but is 15,000 larger than anyone will admit even an optimistic Democrat, is a high mark to aim at. He will probably get pretty nearly all of the Catholic Republican vote in this State, estimated at 8,000. The Republican managers are conceding it all to him, although even at that they don't believe he will get it. But allowing him all of this he will still have 42,000 disaffected Republicans to win over. This is a good many. The highest estimate of what he will get of this class in Portland is 1,000 and that is probably enough. But this will hardly make a dent in the total that he must gain.

On the other hand Mr. Brewster can win by polling approximately 17,000 less votes than Parkhurst received assuming that estimate of the total will be cast is correct.

The conclusion to be drawn from these computations is that Senator Brewster will be the winning candidate by a substantial plurality. If our premises are accepted that the total vote will be 30,000 larger than four years ago, this conclusion is inevitable. If there is error, it must lie in the fact that we have placed the estimate of the total to be cast far too high. But we can even scale down this estimate by a considerable number and then arrive at the same conclusion, as far as the result is concerned.

* * * *

But it is not to be overlooked that in doing this figuring we have taken no account of the fact that many Democrats are going to vote for Brewster this year, who perhaps never before in their lives have cast a Republican ballot. Mr. Pattangall, himself admits that there will be many such. These disaffected Democrats will for the most part be Klan members or Klan sympathizers. It is difficult to guess how many of these there will be. It is without doubt true that many voted in the Republican primaries for Mr. Brewster. There were Democrats on both sides and probably Mr. Farrington had the better of it in this respect, but the winning candidate got a lot of them.

This is shown by the fact that in any number of strong Brewster towns the total vote for him was in excess of the total Demicratic and Republican vote of two years ago. Every last one of the Democrats who voted for Brewster in the primaries [illegible] so [illegible] how many such there were it can be told pretty nearly what the Democratic defection will be.

It has, possibly, no particular bearing on the subject, but here is as good a chance as anywhere to insert in the record the fact that the Republican primary vote this year was considerably in excess of what it ever had been before.

In 1922 the total vote for Governor in the Republican primaries was 73,808 of which Governor Baxter was given 44,708. Last June the total primary vote for the Republican gubernatorial nomination was 93,987. This increase is generally accounted for by the fact of Democratic voting.

The conclusions we have arrived at we are aware, will not be acceptable to our Democratic friends and probably not accepted by them for there is no doubt of their confidence in the success of Mr. Pattangall. But if there is any false reasoning to be found in this presentation of the case we would be glad to have it pointed out.

RALLY IN CUSHING

The Republicans will hold a clambake and rally at Brookfield Farm, Cushing, on Thursday of this week. The meeting will be addressed by two distinguished out-of-State speakers, Hon. John Wesley Hill and Mrs. Anna Tillinghast. The program begins at 1 o'clock, standard time, and will prove an interesting afternoon for those who want to hear national issues discussed. There will also be speakers on State issues.

ALL THREE CAPTURED

George R. Pearson, one of three prisoners who escaped from Belfast jail Aug. 6, was last week located in Brunswick, where he was known as Fred Taylor and was taken to Augusta. Sheriff Frank A. Littlefield went after him. The other two were caught a few days after they got away.

YOUR FAVORITE POEM

If I had to live my life again I would have made a rule to read some poetry and listen to some music at least once a week. The loss of these tastes is a loss of happiness.—Charles Darwin.

FROM THE FLATS

What heartsache—ne'er a hill!
Inexorable, vapid, vague and chill,
The drear sand-levels drain my spirit low,
With one poor word they tell me all they know;
Whereat their stupid tongues to tease my pain
Do draw it o'er again and o'er again.
They hurt my heart with griefs I cannot name:
Always the same, the same.

Nature hath no surprise,
No ambuscade of beauty, 'gainst mine eyes
From brake, or lurking dell, or deep defile:
No humors, frolic forms—this mile, that mile:
No rich reserves or happy-valley hopes
Beyond the bends of roads, the distant slopes.
Her fancy fails, her wild is all run tame:
Ever the same, the same.

Oh! might I through these tears
But glimpse some hill my Georgia high uprears,
Where white the quartz, and pink the pebbles shine,
The hickory heavenward strives, the muscadine
Swings o'er the slope; the oak's far-dappled shade
Darkens the dog-wood in the hollow glade,
And down the hollow from a ferny nook
Bright leaps a living brook!

Coolidge Philosophy and Doctrine

"Men do not make laws. They but discover them. Laws must be justified by something more than the will of the majority. They must rest on the eternal foundation of the majority."

The result of the September 8th election in Maine will take on a national significance. It always has been so, it always will be so, so long as this State continues to stage an election two months in advance of the countrywide balloting for President. Democratic campaign speakers declare that a Republican majority at this time means nothing by way of indicating the general political trend—but let it be known on the morning following election day that Maine's normal Republican majority has perceptibly shrunken and they and their press will be the loudest in heralding the fact as positive indication of a coming overturn of that party's national rule. It is the business of every man and woman who believes in Calvin Coolidge and the party of which he is the leader, to see that nothing diverts them from emphasizing that faith on Sept. 8 by voting the ticket that shall help register one of Maine's old-time Republican majorities.

In two weeks left for the canvass preceding election day there is full opportunity for enlisting the active support of every voter in Knox County who by natural inclination is a Republican, or finds in the candidates and platform of that party features which recommend themselves to his judgment. The results of the voting in the elections of the past four years leave no reason to doubt that Knox County is again to register a series of substantial Republican majorities.

The Boston Americans having tobogganed from the top of the list to the bottom, and now painfully struggled into the sixth place, infuses some hope into their friends throughout New England that they may be found again ere the season closes within calling distance of the top. While the Braves linger hopelessly in the cellar. So loyal a supporter of the national game as Boston deserves to have stronger pennant winning material in its ball teams.

Congratulations to our neighbor Thomaston, whose County Fair for 1924 came to its conclusion with such a gratifying measure of success. The splendid community spirit which Thomaston discovers with respect to this annual occasion furnishes an example in civic patriotism which every town may with profit emulate.

Setting Mr. De Valera at liberty and allowing him free speech from the platform shows how negligible a quantity he has come to be in the eyes of the Irish government.

"Six killed as driver vainly tries to beat a train in Groveton, N. H." A familiar headline today, taking the place of the well-known didn't know it was loaded.

Rev. H. N. Pringle, a former superintendent of the Maine Civic League and for the past 16 years with the International Reform Federation, formerly the International Reform Bureau, who has a summer home at Pine Cliff, Southport, was in the State last Wednesday. For the past year he has been superintendent of New York State for the prevention of crime and will soon return to Washington, D. C., to assume a postition with the I.R.F. Mr. Pringle thinks that the spirit of prohibition enforcement in public opinion has made wonderful strides since the Volstead act was passed and cites the changed attitude of Federal judges throughout the country and the effort of best citizens to live up to the letter of the law and demand enforcement in communities entirely wet years ago.

The second annual muster of the Pirigo State Hand Engine League takes place at Boothbay Harbor, Labor Day, Monday, Sept. 1, under the auspices of Minnehaha Veteran Fireman's Association. Prizes amounting to $500 are offered. In each class the first prize will be $100, second prize $75, third prize $50 and fourth prize $25. The parade will start at 10 a. m. No admission will be charged at the grounds. Rockland will be represented on the board of judges by Charles M. Lawry and on the muster committee by Albion S. Niles. Parking spaces will be provided for autos.

THE NATIONAL OUTLOOK

If Election Were Held This Week Coolidge Would Apparently Have 29 Majority.

National Republican leaders, after a survey of the field at the beginning of the campaign, substantially agree that if the election were held this week the Presidential poll of electoral votes would be as follows:

Coolidge, 295; Davis, 197; La Follette, 39.

Total number of electoral votes, 531. Necessary to elect, 266.

This recapitulation is the result of the first canvass reported by scattering states, and the leaders hope to make the figures still better says the New York Herald Tribune.

Harding defeated Cox in 1920 by a vote of 404 to 127 on the electoral count. The entrance of Senator La Follette into the campaign has added a complex that will keep the leaders perplexed, but they are confident that La Follette, generally speaking, is drawing from Davis more largely than from Coolidge.

The Republicans claim 15 Eastern states with 227 votes, and 18 Western states, with 68 votes, giving a total of 295. They concede Davis a solid block of 11 Southern states, with 126 votes, and while they do not believe that he will carry all of them, they tentatively concede Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri and West Virginia, with a total of 47 electoral votes. These with the 24 votes of Arizona, Nebraska, New Mexico and Oklahoma give Davis a grand total of 197 at the outside. To La Follette they tentatively concede five states—Wisconsin, Minnesota and North and South Dakota, with a total of 39 votes.

On this early computation the Republicans would have 295, as against a combined adverse vote of 236. This would keep the choosing of a President and Vice-President out of Congress and defeat the La Follette objective.

While the Republicans are inclined at the beginning of the canvass to write Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri and West Virginia into the Democratic column, they propose to carry all of those debatable states if they can do it. The Republicans carried Maryland, Missouri and West Virginia four years ago, and elected a United States Senator in Kentucky, which went for Cox. Gov. Hyde of Missouri, says the Republicans will carry that state, but inasmuch as Senator Reed is supporting Davis the Republicans expect a harder battle there than they had four years ago.

Maryland, a naturally close state, is claimed by both the Republicans and Democrats. The candidacy of La Follette makes one guess as good as another.

Kentucky again is politically "dark and bloody," with a good prospect that the Republicans will capture a United States Senator, even if Davis gets the electoral vote.

West Virginia is tentatively given to Davis, because it is his home state. Like Missouri and Tennessee and Kentucky, it is fair fighting ground, and if the Democrats win it, they will know they have had a battle.

Nevada and Washington are put down in the Republican column, as the latest advice indicate a steady growth of sentiment for Coolidge and Dawes.

The annexed tables are the result of the first survey, and represent what the leaders regard, temporarily at least, an "irreducible minimum:"

That John W. Davis, Democratic nominee for President, contrary to reports circulated throughout the country, did not defend Mother Jones and other organizers of the United Mine Workers on the occasion of their prosecution for contempt of court because of their violation of an injunction, but on the contrary prosecuted them, has been proved through the discovery of a file of official papers of the United States Court for the Northern District of West Virginia, at Parkersburg.

Senator Wheeler, who conferred with Senator La Follette and other third party leaders, having returned from his vacation in Massachusetts, made enthusiastic assertions as to the strength of the La Follette ticket in various parts of the country. He emphasized the support which the third ticket would have in New England, and asserted he had found many evidences of this support while in Massachusetts. He said the fight in New England would be between Coolidge and La Follette and that there was no sentiment for the Democratic nominee.

President Coolidge in a letter to Robert R. Moton, as president of the National Negro Business League at Chicago, made public at the White House, congratulates the American negroes on their economic progress and expresses confidence that "their full political rights will be won through the inevitable logic of their position and rightfulness of their claims."

The Legislature of Texas revised its "rural aid law" in 1923. One of the important provisions of the revision is the stipulation that State aid not to exceed $250 may be granted to one school in any district with which to purchase necessary equipment for teaching industrial subjects according to plans furnished or approved by the State department of education. Although but one year has passed since the opportunity for introducing this phase of school work into the small rural schools was offered, 180 schools located in 65 counties have received aid under the act, according to reports made to the United Stats Bureau of Education. As a means of stimulating schools to take advantage of the provisions of the law the State department of education has just issued a bulletin showing what has been accomplished in a year, the requirements of rural schools seeking State aid for equipment for industrial training, a two-year plan of work, and instructions as to qualifications.

OSCAR H. EMERY
Attorney and Counsellor-at-Law
Camden, Maine

To the Citizens and Voters of Knox County:

As a candidate for County Attorney on the Democratic Ticket, I fully appreciate the fact that the candidates for the minor county offices are not apt to be given that careful consideration that would be given them in a purely local election. Our State Election on September 8th, is not held to elect other than county and state officials, together with one U. S Senator and four Representatives to Congress. The election held in November is the election at which the President is elected. They are two distinct elections.

I hold that a public office is a public trust and each voter is given the opportunity to elect (or hire) a public official. The same good judgment should be used in doing this as in hiring any other servant. Unless the trust delivered into the hands of a public official is abused, the public official usually fills the position to the best of his or her ability.

I feel that I do not need to say that as a Judge of Probate for four years and as a member of the legal profession in the county for thirteen years I have faced my dutics having in mind but one thing, to give the public the best I had. A lawyer is a public servant at all times.

I simply wish to call your attention to my candidacy in the September 8th election. The office of County Attorney if I am elected will be filled to the best of my ability.

Most respectfully,
OSCAR H. EMERY.

HAD ONE BAD INNING

And Rockland Again Succumbed To Togus—Camden Blanks Bath—Three Good Games This Week.

I SAW JOB CUNNINGHAM

at the game in Togus Sunday. The Vinalhaven smackman is an invetorate lover of the national game. and when his duties do not clall him onto the raging main he can always be found on the top row of bleachers watching the battle on the diamond. Didn't find much time for ball playing when he was a lad, but at that he used to get into the game once in a while when the fishermen and the stonecutters were playing. He has two sons, I. and A. Cunningham who were well known to Twilight League patrons.—The Sporting Editor.

Togus 6, Rockland 2

The Rockland baseball team made another dusty trip Sunday, apparently for the express purpose of handing Togus the game on a silver platter. This was done in a very thorough manner in the 2d and 3d innings, with the genial McPhee in the role of Kris Kringle. After he had steadied down the playing of the entire Rockland team was above criticism, which is certainly more than can be said for the umpiring of Miller, whose judgment on balls and strikes so exasperated Foster that he twice quit the box.

Togus failed to tally after the 3d, and the only man who saw first base did so through the medium of a complimentary. The big 3d inning, however, had done the mischief.

Rockland's first score came in the 2d inning. Wotton reached first on Cole's error, was advanced to second when W. Foster was thrown out at first, and stole third. He scored on R. Foster's hit. Gregory hit to Merriweather and was an easy out at first, but Foster was caught napping off second, and with that mishap Rockland struck the toboggan. Rockland's second and last run was made by Mealey, and the man who drove him was Wahle, who is playing right field during his vacation.

The 8th inning was a sad commentary on what might have been. McPhee and Dimick singled, Oney hit a pop fly to Feehan, and Wahle was safe in the unsuccessful attempt to catch Dimick at second. Bases full and two out. "My kingdom for a home run," was the silent prayer of the Rockland fans.

Charlies Wotton strode to the plate, and there was a far away look in his eyes as he made a mental measurement of how he intended to knock the ball. What he really did was to hit to Feehan, who nailed McPhee at the plate, and Wotton was easily out at first on a double play.

The game in measure was a triumph for "Tippy" Feehan, who is now pitching for Togus. The score shows that he was hit often, for Togus made no assists, but on the other hand he gave only one base on balls and held hitless such batters as Oney, Wotton and Bill Foster. When he came to bat in the 2d inning Principal Sturtevant of Thomaston High School stepped forward, and in behalf of Thomaston admirers presented "Tippy" with a gold watch and chain. The youngster deserved this gift and all of the nice things that are being said about him, nowhere more than in Rockland.

Foster had 10 strikeouts, to Feehan's five and held Togus to two hits fewer than Rockland made, but issued four passes. He was thrown off his stride, no doubt, by the apparent failure to secure an even break from the umpire.

When it came to fielding Don Gregory was easily the hero of the day. He accepted all of his nine chances, and one of them was a most sensational one hand stop and assist.

The score.

Camden 5, Bath 0

Carleton brought a trappy little team from Bath Saturday, and Camden's conquest was not too easy, despite the fact that Price was going well and the boys were playing errorless ball behind him.

Young was the busiest man in seven counties, making three of the home team's five runs, and three of its eight hits, besides stealing a base and accepting four chances. Alden Allen also had an active day in the field, where he handled five flies to the queen's taste. Price fattened his batting average by hitting safely twice in three times up, one of his hits being a double. He held Bath to four singles, and kept those hits so well scattered that the visitors saw third but once in the entire game.

Gilmore, the Bath shortstop was one of the stars of the game, making two splendid plays, after falling prostrate on the ground. Duley played a sturdy game at first, accepting all of his chances, besides making half of the hits credited to his team.

Rockland 11, Waterville 10

The Rockland Elks ball team walloped the Waterville Elks Friday afternoon 11-10 in one of the most thrilling battles ever staged between these two aggregations. From the moment when Young knocked a single through Marcoux's territory to the time when Saucier flied out to Sullivan the outcome of the contest was in the air.

Each team scored in the first, one run each. Waterville then stood still until the seventh when six more men crossed the plate. Meanwhile the boys from the seacoast added another in the second, made it three in the fourth, four in the sixth, six in the seventh, one behind the swatters of Waterville Elkdom. In the eighth Waterville boosted the score up to 10-6 and the light of victory shone in their eyes—but the terrible ninth, a baseball nightmare for the losers. Hits, luck, two free tickets, all contributed to the fact that five Rocklandites crossed the home plate.

It was what might be classed by the fan as a good game up to the sixth, although a little one-sided in favor of the visitors. Although the fielding was a little rough the pitchers worked very well.

A good crowd watched and enjoyed proceedings and lusty cheers from time to time helped keep the athletes in good spirits.

In the middle of the game a very elaborate box covered with many wrappings was presented to the star performer of the game, "Squeak" Grindle of the Lime City. When he had removed said wrappings he found within a large plug of chewing tobacco and a package of cigarettes of a well known brand. The presentation was made by John Kelleher of the audience.

After the game everyone went to the Young China Restaurant where a fine banquet awaited. The score:

"For Rent" or "For Sale"

Which column of the paper are you interested in?

Are you one of those who rent and move and rent and move again?

Wouldn't you rather buy or build a home?

If your rent amounts to $40 monthly, you part with $4,800 in ten years—$9,600 in twenty years.

You haven't a thing to show for all that money.

Under our home-ownership plan you could own your home in about ten years, on monthly payments of not much more than rent.

Pay rent to yourself. Be your own landlord and run your home to suit yourself.

We are organized to help you. Our terms are fair and convenient. We are always glad to talk it over—without obligation.

Weather This Week

Weather outlook for this week in North Atlantic States: Possibly occasionally showers. Temperature near normal most of the week.

The Rockland Band's Labor Day engagement at Windsor Fair has been cancelled.

Charles M. Lawry reports seeing a Marmon touring car with the Maine license number of 101,333. As the old saying goes: "How's that for high?"

The Finnish chapel on the St. Georges River rod will be dedicated the first Sunday in September at 2 p. m. The usual Monday services will be held.

King Hiram Council, R. & S. M., will discuss important matters at a mass meeting which will be held in the Temple at 7.30 tonight. A large attendance is desired.

The Spanish War Veterans have another good time coming next Sunday when they will be guests of Comrade George Lurvey at Pond Island. The expedition will leave the public landing at 10 a. m., daylight time, in a launch.

William R. Pattangall, candidate for governor; and Bertrand G. McIntire, candidate for Representative to Congress will vaccinate the Democratic voters of Knox county Thursday and Friday. They have done this on several previous occasions, but it didn't seem to take. They hope to have better luck this time.

The annual field day of the employes of the New England Telephone Co., in the Bangor district, which includes Bangor, Waterville, Belfast, Rockland, Bucksport, Winterport, Orono, Old Town, Lincoln and Millinocket, was held at Camp Benson Saturday, about 300 enjoying the outing. A program of field sports was held in which both men and women participated, the sport being preceded by a chicken dinner served at 12.30. Dancing was enjoyed in the evening.

Mary Perry Rich again represented Knox county as the woman member of its Republican State committee at its Augusta House conference Saturday and later enjoyed the eloquence of Gen. Dawes at the Island Park rally. Mrs. Tillinghast, who has since leaving this city made her name famous as leader of Massachusetts Republican women, is engaged to speak in Knox, the only dates she will have to spare for the Maine campaign. Senator Pepper too will be a wonderful drawing card, a strong national leader.

Nathan Griffith, a well known Philadelphia attorney was a visitor in Rockland over Sunday, and incidentally a guest at the Bancroft Training School, where his son has been a pupil for many years. Mr. Griffith has been a member of the Philadelphia Bar 27 years, and for the past eight years has been professor of medical jurisprudence at the Hahnemann Medical College. It had been a number of years since he visited Rockland, and he expressed his approval of the many improvements which he noted. "Your stores look better, and your city appears more progressive generally," he told a Courier-Gazette reporter. Mr. Griffith improved his brief stay here with a deep sea fishing trip, chaperoned by Oscar B. Foster.

Heart-shaped, blood red flyers attracted much attention along Main street yesterday, heralding "Dearest Night" at Oakland Park tonight. Many innovations and novel attractions are promised.

Bert Maxcy, clerk at the Rockland Hardware store, parked his motor car on Summer street Saturday night, and when it came going home time the car was not there. The police were notified. Later the car was found far out in the suburbs, having been impressed into serve by somebody who wanted a joy ride.

The big baseball events in Knox county this week are: Rockland vs Camden, Broadway Field, at 5.15 this afternoon; Rockland vs the Farmington State League team, Broadway Field, Thursday at 5.15 p. m.; Camden vs Brunswick, at Camden, Saturday at 3 p. m. The Camden game will be played for the Edward W. Bok prize of $250.

Among the incoming freight received via the American Railway Express Co. last week was a carload of lobsters from the Provinces, consigned to local dealers. The crustaceans filled 89 barrels and tipped the scales at about 9000 pounds. This sounds like carrying coal to Newcastle, but there was a local shortage, and orders simply had to be filled.

The Bath Times editorially says: "The super-dreadnaught West Virginia has arrived at Rockland and will now undergo her official trials over the course there. It is a strange day when Rockland does not have one or more naval ships in port for tests or other purposes and the Lime City is becoming quite a naval base." And one of its chief regrets is that Bath is not still sending over more warships to make new speed records.

While in Boston recently Dr. R. J. Wasgatt improved the opportunity to visit the city's floating hospital. The first mate looked rather familiar to him, and he learned that the officer was Hiram L. Ingerson of Rockland. In the course of a chat he was interested to learn that the commander of he craft was also a Rockland man—Capt. Grover; and that the chief engineer was a Mr. Upham of Machias. "I began to feel pretty much at home," said Dr. Wasgatt.

The Ford Motor Company now has 13,902 authorized dealers throughout the world, an increase of 831 the past year. Expansion of foreign sales and service organizations has reached record proportions this year with the establishment of a new branch at Santiago, Chile, Ford Motor of Sweden at Stockholm, Ford Motor Company of Rotterdam, Holland and the Ford Motor Company of South Africa, Ltd., at Port Elizabeth, the latter established by the Ford Motor Company, Ltd., Canada. This makes 11 foreign incorporations or a total of 23 branch establishments, including branches.

Painters have practically completed their task on the new State Prison buildings in Thomaston, and the finishing touches will be added this week by Frank R. Blackington of this city, who has been foreman of the job. C. J. Clark of Portland had the contract. The work lasted five months and four tons of paint were used. All of the new buildings have been painted, interior and exterior, and some very artistic decorating has been done in the administration building. Mr. Blackington goes to University of Maine with the same contractor to paint a new wing which has just been built.

Valentine Chisholm has bought from Mrs. F. W. Fuller the eastern half of the double house at 30-32 Grove street, thereby becoming owner of the entire property.

Mrs. Josie E. Cummings of Union was ordered to pay costs of court amounting to $13.12, in Municipal Court yesterday after being tried on the charge of malicious mischief. Her offense consisted of cutting one of the tires on the motor car used by her stepdaughter, Mrs. Burgess.

Bertrand G. McIntire, Democratic nominee for Representative to Congress; Fulton J. Redman, nominee for U. S. Senator; and Obadiah Gardner, nominee for Presidential elector, addressed a handful of listeners in Postoffice Square last night. Mr. Redman challenged his opponent, Senator Fernald to take a stand on the Klan issue, and then remarked that it was too late anyhow.

Capt. and Mrs. H. R Huntley and granddaughter Julia Molway, returned yesterday from Boston, where they have been since Aug. 6, attending the National Grand Army Encampment and visiting relatives. While the Encampment was in progress they had the pleasure of listening to Gov. Cox and Mayor Curley, and of meeting Mrs. John Charles Black, widow of Gen. Black, who was Commissioner of Pensions under President Cleveland, and whom Capt. Huntley remembers with special gratitude because of the fact that Gen. Black aided him in obtaining his first pension after the claim had been rejected. Capt. and Mrs. Huntley visited many historic places around Boston and in Milton, Mass., saw a copy of Lincoln's birthplace.

OPENED THE MAINE CAMPAIGN

Gen. Charles G. Dawes, Republican nominee for the Vice Presidency, came to Maine Saturday, and at Island Park, Augusta, addressed one of the most remarkable political gatherings ever held in this State. Every county in Maine was represented, and Knox, of course sent a good sized delegation.

Other speakers were Gov. Baxter and Ralph O. Brewster of Portland, the Republican candidate for governor. Frank G. Farrington of Augusta, president of the Maine Senate, who was defeated by Mr. Brewster for the nomination by a small margin, presided at the meeting.

A feature of the meeting was the installation of an amplifier, so that everyone, no matter where he stood, could hear the speakers. Arrangements were made by the committee in charge of this phase of the meeting whereby the finest public address system the country can produce was put into use. The device was mounted on a truck and was so effective in its operation that no matter where a person on the island stood, he was able to hear Gen. Dawes as clearly as if he were alongside of the speaker.

Another feature was the automobile parade which left Portland at 9 o'clock in the morning in which were large delegations from Cumberland and York counties. A dinner was served at noon. Eight bushels of pea beans baked as only Maine cooks can bake them, 8,000 rolls, all buttered, 10,000 doughnuts, and 350 gallons of coffee were served to the hungry multitude.

POSTOFFICE PICNIC

The Fannie Parnell Carries a Husky Crew To Big Green Island.

The annual picnic of the Post Office employes and their friends was held Sunday. The following "Page from the log of the Fannie Parnell" tells the story:

Sunday, Aug. 24. Rockland, Maine, Lat. 44, Lon. 66. Weather overcast. Wind easterly, fog. Glass steady. Bound for Big Green Island. Shipped green crew composed of P. O. employes and others. Took on cargo of foodstuffs.

9.30 a. m. Put out to sea. Ship's band rendered selections while passing out of the harbor. Manned forward gun and prepared to salute U. S. S. West Virginia. Premature explosion of forward gun. The cook and several members of the crew caught in the "flare-back;" but no one was disabled.

10 a. m. Fleet of schooners passed. Glass showed marked tendency to rise. Warmer. School of sea-serpents reported off port-bow. Changed the port watch.

11 a. m. Anchored off Big Green Island. It would require a very ingenious man to get lost in the woods on this island. Sent the cook and a landing party ashore. Postmaster Blethen went ashore to inspect the herds on the island. He later pronounced them O. K. Remainder of crew began fishing. Dan Sullivan caught the biggest fish.

The ball game between the "Sea Gulls," Maurice Wilson captain, and the "Pirates," led by Capt. Philbrook, resulted in a tie score—on account of lack of time. But only the clever manner in which Capt. Wilson handled a long hit to center field, with the bases full, saved the Sea Gulls from defeat.

Many specialties were introduced and enjoyed. John Dan Shepherd proved a versatile entertainer and the full, rich tones of Mr. Spillane, the tenor, were also highly appreciated.

A splendid shore dinner was served on the beach by chef Cushman and an able corps of assistants was perhaps the big feature of the occasion and a vast quantity of fish chowder and lobsters was quickly disposed of.

The return voyage was accomplished without mishap, thanks to the skill of Capt. Norton, and much pleasure was added to the trip by the melodies of the ship's band, in praise of which too much could not be said.

General Passenger Agent, Leroy D. Perry handled his many duties in a very creditable manner and was responsible in a great measure for a very succesful outing.

FRIDAY FOR LUCK

Children's Playground Will Will Close With Games, Dances and Community Supper.

The Children's Playground will close its third season Friday with a session lasting from 4 to 8 p. m. The festivities will be comprehensive and of interest to all ages. The public is given a most cordial invitation to avail itself of the entertainment.

A community picnic supper will be a feature to which all children and parents are invited. Folk dancing by a group of girls, horse shoe pitching contests for all ages, basketball games for men and boys and girls too, all sorts of sports and amusements will be worked in by the play directors to make the day one long to be remembered. A band concert by Rockland Band will feature the closing hour, 7 to 8 p. m.

The play directors, Misses Dorothy Elaisdell and Dorothy Cross, are especially anxious that the public join the youngsters in this closing event in order that the children may carry a happy memory of the Playground through the winter with them. Everybody will be welcome and a jolly four hours is assured. Take your own lunch.

HELD FOR GRAND JURY

George Fraughter Placed Under Nominal Bonds In the Sukeforth Manslaughter Case.

George Fraughton was yesterday held for the September grand jury, after a brief trial in which he was charged with causing the death of Edwin Sukeforth by manslaughter. Impressed by the evidence that provocation was offered, and that Sukeforth's death was due to his fall upon the pavement, Judge Miller imposed only nominal bonds in the sum of $500. The State was represented by County Attorney Dwinal, while the respondent's counsel was Frank A. Tirrell, Jr.

Abraham Cassman of 89 Tillson avenue, who reported the case to the police wrestled with the English language in an attempt to tell the prosecution and the cross examining attorney just what he saw. The substance of it was that he saw somebody strike Sukeforth, but didn't knew who the man was. The affair took place in front of Mrs. Allen's residence, which is diagonally across from Cassman's store—a distance of possibly 45 feet. The time was about 10 o'clock last Thursday night. Sukeforth had previously bought a bottle of soft beer in Cassman's store, and drank it on the premises.

"What kind of beer?" asked the Court.

"The kind they sell everywhere," replied Mr. Cassman.

"Did it have a kick in it?"

"Oh, no!"

Edward Brown of Searsport was the principal witness. He had been walking with Sukeforth just before the tragedy occurred. First they went to the merry-go-round then to the steamboat wharf. Witness saw a man standing by the roadside. Sukeforth said to him:

"You're a fool: you don't know anything."

The man, who was unknown to Mr. Brown, wanted to know why.

"You're a fool; the biggest fool I ever saw," was Sukeforth's answer.

The witness and Sukeforth continued their jaunt, and later met the same man.

"Why did you call me a fool?" he asked.

"That's what you are" replied Sukeforth; "you're the biggest fool I ever saw."

"I am not any bigger fool than you," retorted the other—who proved to be George Fraughton.

"You are," retorted Sukeforth.

And then Fraughton struck, the blow landing above one of Sukeforth's eyes. Sukeforth fell backwards onto the granite paving and lay there unconscious. The witness got the man into a sitting posture, but there was no life in him. A woman brought some water which the witness poured upon Sukeforth's head and neck. The police came and Sukeforth was taken in the patrol wagon to the home of his sister, Mrs. Abbie Carkin, Achorn street.

"Had Sukeforth been drinking?" asked Attorney Tirrell.

"I never saw him take a drink while I was with him."

"Don't you know that he has been a drinking man?"

"Yes."

Marshal Luke S. Davis told of being summoned at 11.45 p. m. by Deputy Marshal Fernald, and of going to the home of Arthur E. Wall, Fraughton's father-in-law, in Sea street place with Deputy Fernald and Patrolman Price. Fraughton was sitting on the edge of the bed, dressing. He admitted having trouble with Sukeforth, and having struck him after they had a few words. Marshal Davis said that he found blood about four feet from the curbing on Week's street, about 10 feet from Tillson avenue.

Dr. W. H. Armstrong testified that he was called Thursday night by Sukeforth's sister, Mrs. Carkin. He found the man lying prone on the bed bleeding from mouth and nose, and arterial blood was flowing from a cut on his forehead. The back of his head was mashed, much as beefsteak is mashed. The victim died half an hour later, while the witness was working upon him. Dr Armstrong testified that he did not detect any fracture of the skull. He thought the cause of death was the profound shock when he fell over backward. The wound on the forehead was such as could be made with a stone ring. Witness thought there was a possibility that this could have caused death, but it was his opinion that it was due to both wounds, as Sukeforth was a very frail man.

William E. Hodgdon said that a small crowd had gathered when the patrol wagon arrived. Brown was holding Sukeforth, and remarked: 'He isn't drunk; we will take him home."

Medical Examiner H. W. Frohock expressed the opinion that Sukeforth's death was due to the blow which he received on the back of his head when he fell on the paving, and that it could not have been caused by the blow in the face.

Grand Forks, (N. D.) Herald—The Coolidge acceptance address is in keeping with the best Coolidge traditions. In form it is concise, trenchant, incisive. In substance it is full of meat. And Mr. Coolidge has performed the difficult feat of giving to his campaign an expression which is likely to be adopted spontaneously as a slogan. He was singularly happy in his use of the term "common sense."

Minneapolis Tribune.—President Coolidge has posted his political and governmental thesis over the door of the American public forum. He has set it down in simple terms, without waste of words, so that every voter may know just what they mean. American, a 100 percent economist. They reveal him at once as a great and a wise progressive who uses common sense as his monitor and guide.

Summer Food Suggestions

FOR a picnic or a summer luncheon dish a most satisfying meat may be prepared using veal and chicken as follows:

Jellied Chicken.—Wipe a knuckle of veal and put it into a large kettle with enough cold water to cover. Bring slowly to the simmering point. Add a six-pound fowl and cook gently until the meat is tender, adding, when half done, a teaspoonful of salt. Remove the fowl and set aside to cool, when it should be cut into slices. Put the lean meat from the veal knuckle through a meat grinder, using one and one-half cupfuls. Let the stock simmer until reduced to a pint, add pepper and salt to season, with a little onion juice; cool and strain through a cloth. To the chopped veal add one cupful of stock and season to taste with salt, paprika and lemon and onion juice. When well mixed add one cupful of chopped celery. Place a bread pan in ice water and pour in the stock about one-eighth of an inch deep. When firm decorate with sliced, hard cooked eggs or canned pimentoes cut into strips. Add the remaining stock very slowly, not to disturb the decoration. When firm add alternate layers of sliced chicken and veal, until all is used. Cover the top with buttered paper and place over it a weight. Let stand over night on ice. Remove from the pan and serve garnished with water cress.

Cucumber and Pineapple Salad.—Soak two tablespoonfuls of gelatin in one-fourth of a cupful of salt and three tablespoonfuls of sugar. Add one-half cupful of vinegar and the juice of half a lemon. Set aside to cool. Just as the mixture begins to congeal stir in one cupful of crushed and a cupful of grated cucumber. Pour into small molds which have been dipped in cold water. Chill and serve on crisp lettuce leaves. Serve with a mayonnaise dressing, using three-fourths of a cupful and adding one-half cupful of whipped cream.

THE OLD HOME PAPER

Editor of The Courier-Gazette:—

"No matter where we chance to roam, Old Maine that gave us birth still holds first place." That was fine little poem by our fellow-countryman Lieut. Reed, written from the other side of the world. I have always contended that the exiles are the only people who truly appreciate the "home paper." Why? Because the home folks know before the paper is printed a great many of the events recorded therein. The exile gets his entirely from the printed page.

Since Dad went on the long journey I depend entirely upon the home paper for the news. It matters not that we know very few of the people whose daily doings are recorded, there, we know it is news from the home folks anyway.

The last lines of Lieut. Reed's poem are true, as we exiles all know—"No matter where you turn your steps, there's a bit of you stays, home."

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I—Francis Ledsam defends Oliver Hilditch, a powerful business man, in a murder case and succeeds in getting him off, only to be told by a young, prepossessing woman, who says that she is Oliver Hilditch's wife, that Hilditch is an arch-criminal and that Ledsam has turned loose a dangerous man to resume his preying upon society.

CHAPTER II—Ledsam dines with his greatest friend, Andrew Wilmore, a journalist, at a fashionable restaurant that same night and, to their astonishment, they see Oliver Hilditch and his wife come there to dine, also. Before leaving, Hilditch extracts a promise from Ledsam that he will dine with him the following night.

CHAPTER III—At dinner with the Hilditches, Oliver shows Ledsam how he killed his victim and says his own death the same way would make his wife supremely happy. Returning home, Ledsam receives a phone call from Margaret, saying Oliver has been murdered.

CHAPTER V—While leaving the restaurant and waiting for their car, a young couple attracts their attention. The girl urges her partner, Victor Bidlake, a young man-about-town, to go out into the fog and hail a taxi. He does so and is brought back, almost instantly, killed. The friends immediately connect Sir Timothy with the crime, in their own minds, but can find no facts on which to act. Shopland, a Scotland Yarder detective drawn into the case, asks Ledsam to call on Daisy Hyslop, the girl in the case.

CHAPTER VI—Daisy tells Ledsam nothing much, except that her companion had led a pretty fast life and was trying to break away from his old evil companions.

CHAPTER VIII—Just as Sir Timothy appears to be the murderer in the second affair, another man suicides, admitting his guilt.

CHAPTER IX—Brast displays an unusual humane side to his character and mystifies Ledsam by it.

CHAPTER X—Francis is invited to dine with Brast at his cottage. Returning to his office he finds an unfinished scrawl from the brother of Wilmore, asking aid, but ending abruptly. Wilmore then tells him his younger brother has been missing for days and they fear harm has befallen him. Search for him proves unavailing.

CHAPTER XI—Under the influence of a lovely moon and the quiet of the river Francis kisses Margaret, and the latter does not resent it, although asking Francis to escort her back to the house. They find Sir Timothy had taken Lady Cynthia to see the Walled House. The next morning Francis escorts Lady Cynthia to London and finds Margaret had left before them. Francis admits that he wishes to marry Margaret.

CHAPTER XII—Shopland tells Francis that he can find nothing definite about young Wilmore's whereabouts. Later Sir Timothy calls on Francis and the latter asks permission to pay court to his daughter. Brast does not definitely oppose him, but is not cordial, and then tells him that he had come to find out where she was. After leaving Sir Timothy, Francis runs into Margaret, who is coming out of a steamship office, having just bought a ticket to South America. He persuades her to give up her trip. She yields and becomes engaged to him.

CHAPTER XIII—Sir Timothy finds the happy couple dining at Ledsam's chambers. Unable to forbid the marriage he secures their consent to keep the announcement of their engagement secret for two weeks. Shopland meets Francis and states that he hopes to soon have Sir Timothy in the toils of the law.

CHAPTER XIV—Margaret confesses to Francis that she had never cared for Hilditch. Sir Timothy offers Shopland temporary truce, whereby Francis, Wilmore and Daisy Hyslop will be allowed to attend a party at the Walled House and then tell him of any illegal happening there. The detective accepts.

CHAPTER XV—Lady Cynthia forces an invitation from Brast to a trip to the London slums. Lady Cynthia falls in love with Brast, a feeling he reciprocates.

CHAPTER XVI—Plans for a party at the Walled House are laid, to which Lady Cynthia is also invited.

CHAPTER XVII—A seedy looking individual tells Francis he was Hilditch's butler at the time Hilditch was killed, and that he saw Sir Timothy commit the murder. Francis buys his silence and receives in exchange two confessions.

CHAPTER XV.—Continued

"Don't be sarcastic," she begged. "I haven't yet had the offer of marriage I want, anyhow."

"You'll get one you don't want in a moment," he warned her.

She made a little grimace.

"Don't!" she laughed nervously. "How am I to preserve my romantic notions of you as the emperor of the criminal world, if you kiss me as you did just now—you kissed me rather well—and then ask me to marry you? It isn't your role. You must light a cigarette now, pat the back of my hand, and swagger off to another of your haunts of vice."

"In other words, I am not to propose?" Sir Timothy said slowly.

"You see how decadent I am," she sighed. "I want to toy with my pleasures. Besides, there's that scamp of a brother of mine coming up to have a drink—I saw him get out of a taxi—and you couldn't get it through in time, not with dignity."

The rattle of the lift as it stopped was plainly audible. He stooped and kissed her fingers.

"I fear some day," he murmured, "I shall be a great disappointment to you."

CHAPTER XVI

LEDSAM and Margaret were agreeably surprised the next day at noon, when they had arranged at luncheon for two at the Ritz, to have Lady Cynthia and Sir Timothy show up and join them.

As Francis hurried off to give the necessary orders to enlarge his table, a page-boy touched him on the arm.

"If you please, sir," he announced, "you are wanted on the telephone."

"I?" Francis exclaimed. "Some mistake, I should think. Nobody knows that I am here."

"Mr. Ledsam," the boy said. "This way, sir."

Francis walked down the vestibule to the row of telephone boxes at the further end. The attendant who was standing outside indicated one of them and motioned the boy to go away. Francis stepped inside. The man followed, closing the door behind him.

"I am asking your pardon, sir, for taking a great liberty," he confessed. "No one wants you on the telephone. I wished to speak to you."

Francis looked at him in surprise. The man was evidently agitated. Somehow or other, his face was vaguely familiar.

"Who are you and what do you want with me?" Francis asked.

"I was butler to Mr. Hilditch, sir," the man replied. "I waited upon you the night you dined there, sir—the night of Mr. Hilditch's death."

"I have a revelation to make with regard to that night, sir," the man went on, "which I should like to place in your hands. It is a very serious matter, and there are reasons why something must be done about it at once. Can I come and see you at your rooms, sir?"

Francis studied the man for a moment intently. He was evidently agitated—evidently, too, in very bad health. His furtive manner was against him. On the other hand, that might have arisen from nervousness.

"I shall be in at half-past three, No. 13-b Clarges street," Francis told him.

"I can get off for half an hour then, sir," the man replied. "I shall be very glad to come. I must apologize for having troubled you, sir."

Francis went slowly back to his trio of guests. All the way down the carpeted vestibule he was haunted by the grim shadow of a spectral fear. The frozen horror of that ghastly evening was before him like a hateful tableau. Hilditch's mocking words rang in his ears: "My death is the one thing in the world which would make my wife happy." The court scene, with all its gloomy tragedy, rose before his eyes—only in the dock, instead of Hilditch, he saw another!

Francis found them talking about the fight the night before, when he returned to the table, and caught Lady Cynthia saying to Sir Timothy, "I suppose that you are very disappointed in my stealing over to see the battle?"

"On the contrary," he answered, "I am delighted."

"You mean that?" she asked incredulously.

"I do," he declared. "Companionship between our sexes is very delightful so far as it goes, but the fundamental differences between a man's outlook and tastes and a woman's should never be bridged over. I myself do not wish to learn to knit. I do not care for the womankind in whom I am interested to appreciate and understand fighting."

Lady Cynthia took a cigarette from her case and leaned over to Francis for a light.

"The world is changing," she declared. "I cannot bear many more shocks. I fancied that I had written myself forever out of Sir Timothy's good books because of my confession just now."

"I Am Hopefully in Love With Your Father," Lady Cynthia Confessed.

He smiled across at her. His words were words of courteous badinage, but Lady Cynthia was conscious of a strange little sense of pleasure.

"On the contrary," he assured her, "you found your way a little further into my heart."

"It seems to me, in a general sort of way," Margaret observed, leaning back in her chair, "that you and my father are becoming extraordinarily friendly, Cynthia."

"I am hopefully in love with your father," Lady Cynthia confessed. "It has been coming on for a long time. I suspected it the first time I ever met him. Now I am absolutely certain."

"It's quite a new idea," Margaret remarked. "Shall we like her in the family, Francis?"

"No airs!" Lady Cynthia warned her. "You two are not properly engaged yet. It may devolve upon me to give my consent."

"In that case," Francis replied, "I hope that we may at least count upon your influence with Sir Timothy?"

"If you will return the compliment and urge my suit with him," Lady Cynthia laughed. "I am afraid he can't quite make up his mind about me, and I am so nice. I haven't flirted nearly so much as people think, and my instincts are really quite domestic."

"My position," Sir Timothy remarked, as he made an unsuccessful attempt to possess himself of the bill which Francis had called for, "is becoming a little difficult."

"Not really difficult," Lady Cynthia objected, "because the real decision rests in your hands."

"Just listen to the woman!" Margaret exclaimed. "Do you realize, father, that Cynthia is making the most brazen advances to you? And I was going to ask her if she'd like to come back to the Sanctuary with us this evening!"

Lady Cynthia was suddenly eager. Margaret glanced across at her father. Sir Timothy seemed almost imperceptibly to stiffen a little.

"Margaret has carte blanche at the Sanctuary as regards her visitors," he said. "I am afraid that I shall be busy over at the Walled House."

"But you'd come and dine with us?"

Sir Timothy hesitated. An issue which had been looming in his mind for many hours seemed to be suddenly joined.

"Please!" Lady Cynthia begged.

Sir Timothy followed the example of the others and rose to his feet. He avoided Lady Cynthia's eyes. He seemed suddenly a little tired.

"I will come and dine," he assented quietly. "I am afraid that I cannot promise more than that. Lady Cynthia, as she knows, is always welcome at the Sanctuary."

CHAPTER XVII

PUNCTUAL to his appointment that afternoon, the man who had sought an interview with Francis was shown into the latter's study in Clarges street.

He wore an overcoat over his livery, and directly he entered the room Francis was struck by his intense pallor. He had been trying feverishly to assure himself that all that the man required was the usual sort of help, or assistance into a hospital. Yet there was something furtive in his visitor's manner, something which suggested the bearer of a guilty secret.

"Please tell me what you want as quickly as you can," Francis begged. "I am due to start down into the country in a few minutes."

"I won't keep you long, sir," the man replied. "The matter is rather a serious one."

"Are you ill?"

"Yes, sir!"

"You had better sit down."

The man relapsed gratefully into a chair.

"I'll leave out everything that doesn't count, sir," he said. "I'll be as brief as I can. I want you to go back to the night I waited upon you at dinner—the night Mr. Oliver Hilditch was found dead. You gave evidence. The jury brought in 'suicide.' It wasn't suicide at all, sir. Mr. Hilditch was murdered."

The sense of horror against which he had been struggling during the last few hours, crept once more through the whole being of the man who listened. He was face to face once more with that terrible issue. Had he perjured himself in vain? Was the whole structure of his dreams about to collapse, to fall about his ears?

"By whom?" he faltered.

"By Sir Timothy Brast, sir."

Francis, who had been standing with his hand upon the table, felt suddenly inclined to laugh. Facile though his brain was, the change of issues was too tremendous for him to readily assimilate it. He picked up a cigarette from an open box, with shaking fingers, lit it, and threw himself into an easy-chair. He was all the time quite unconscious of what he was doing.

"Sir Timothy Brast," he repeated.

"Yes, sir," the man reiterated. "I wish to tell you the whole story."

"I am listening," Francis assured him.

"That evening, before dinner, Sir Timothy Brast called to see Mr. Hilditch, and a very stormy interview took place. I do not know the rights of that, sir. I only know that there was a fierce quarrel. Mrs. Hilditch came in and Sir Timothy left the house. His last words to Mr. Hilditch were, 'You will hear from me again.' As you know, sir—I mean as you remember, if you followed the evidence—all the servants slept at the back of the house. I slept in the butler's room downstairs, next to the plate pantry. I was awake when you left, sitting in my easy-chair, reading. Then minutes after you had left, there was a sound at the front door as though someone had knocked with their knuckles. I got up to open it, but Mr. Hilditch was before me. He admitted Sir Timothy. They went back into the library together. It struck me that Mr. Hilditch had had a great deal to drink, and there was a queer look on Sir Timothy's face that I didn't understand. I stepped into the little room which communicates with the library by folding doors. There was a chink already between the two. I got a knife from the pantry and widened it until I could see through. I heard very little of the conversation, but there was no quarrel. Mr. Hilditch took up the weapon which you know about, sat in a chair and held it to his heart. I heard him say something like this: 'This ought to appeal to you, Sir Timothy. You're a specialist in this sort of thing. One little touch, and there you are.' Mr. Hilditch said something about putting it away. My master turned to Sir Timothy and said something in a low tone. Suddenly Sir Timothy leaned over. He caught hold of Mr. Hilditch's hand which held the hilt of the dagger and—and—well, he just drove it in, sir. Then he stood away. Mrs. Hilditch sprang up and would have screamed, but Sir Timothy placed his hand over her mouth. In a moment I heard her say, 'What have you done?' Sir Timothy looked at Mr. Hilditch quite calmly. 'I have ridded the world of a verminous creature,' he said. My knees began to shake. My nerves were always bad. I crept back into my room, took off my clothes and got into bed. I had just put the light out when they called for me."

Francis was himself again. There was an immense relief, a joy in his heart. He had never for a single moment blamed Margaret, but he had never for a single moment forgotten. It was a closed chapter, but the stain was on its pages. It was wonderful to tear it out and scatter the fragments.

"I remember you at the inquest," he said. "Your name is John Walter."

"Yes, sir."

"Your evidence was very different."

"Yes, sir."

"You kept all this to yourself."

"I did, sir. I thought it best."

"Tell me what has happened since?"

The man looked down at the table.

"I have always been a poor man, sir," he said. "I have had bad luck whenever I made a try to start anything. I thought there seemed a chance for me here. I went to Sir Timothy and I told him everything."

"Well?"

"Sir Timothy never turned a hair, sir. When I had finished he was very short with me, almost curt. 'You have behaved like a man of sense, Walter,' he said. 'How much?' I hesitated for some time. Then I could see he was getting impatient. I doubled what I had thought of first. 'A thousand pounds, sir,' I said. Sir Timothy he went to a safe in the wall and he counted out a thousand pounds in notes, there and then. He brought them over to me. 'Walter,' he said, 'there is your thousand pounds. For that sum I understand you promise to keep what you saw to yourself?' 'Yes, sir,' I agreed. 'Take it, then,' he said, 'but I want you to understand this: There have been many attempts, but no one yet has ever succeeded in blackmailing me. No one ever will. I give you this thousand pounds willingly. It is what you have asked for. Never let me see your face again. If you come to me starving, it will be useless. I shall not part with another penny.'"

The man's simple way of telling his story, his speech, seemed all to add to the dramatic nature of his disclosure. Francis found himself sitting like a child who listens to a fairy story.

"And then?" he asked simply.

"I went off with the money," Walter continued, "and I had cruel bad luck. I put it into a pub. I was robbed a little, I drank a little, my wife wasn't any good. I lost it all, sir. I found myself destitute. I went back to Sir Timothy."

"Well?"

The man shifted his feet nervously. He seemed to have come to the difficult part of his story.

"Sir Timothy was as hard as nails," he said slowly. "He saw me. The moment I had finished, he rang the bell. 'Hedges,' he said to the man-servant who came in, 'this man has come here to try and blackmail me. Throw him out. If he gives any trouble, send for the police. If he shows himself here again, send for the police.'"

"What happened then?"

"Well, I nearly blurted out the whole story," the man confessed, "and then I remembered that wouldn't do me any good, so I went away. I got a job at the Ritz, but I was too ill a few days afterward. I went to see a doctor. From him I got my death-warrant, sir."

"Is it heart?"

"It's heart, sir," the man acknowledged. "The doctor told me I might snuff out at any moment. I can't live, anyway, for more than a year. I've got a little girl."

"Now, just why have you come to see me?" Francis asked.

(To be continued)

"Now, Just Why Have You Come to See Me?" Francis Asked.

Mrs. Frank Nadeau has returned from Fort Fairfield.

Mrs. John H. Miller and son Roger are visiting Mrs. Miller's mother in Connecticut.

Dr. Richard S. Benner and family have returned to Springfield, Mass.

The Paragon Button Corporation Band will be guests of Harold Thomas at Crescent Beach Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Rhoder of Brighton, Mass., are visiting at Theodore Feyler's.

The Ladies Circle of the Baptist church held an all day session in the vestry Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Richards and daughter Mary of Greenfield, Mass., have been guests of Mrs. Ella Achorn. Mrs. Richards was formerly Miss Iva Mayo of this town.

Mrs. E. T. Hardy and Mrs Benjamin Hardy and children have returned to Everett, Mass.

Mr. and Mrs. John H. Hayes and son, James of Quincy, Mass., have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Shuman.

The Susannah Wesley Society were entertained at the home of Mrs. Flora Mank last week. About 30 members attended and spent a pleasant afternoon at Mrs. Mank's hospitable home.

Mrs. Asa Busky and children have returned to Fitchburg, Mass. They were accompanied by Marshall Hodgkins.

Miss Florence Haskell of Worcester, Mass., has been the guest of Mrs. J. V. Benner a few days.

E. H. Philbrick of Rockland, Mrs. Mary Welt and Mrs. Theodore Pearle motored to Augusta last Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. John B. Welt of Auburn spent the weekend with his mother, Mrs. Mary Welt.

A distressing accident occurred to Ira Walter at his home at Feyler's Corner last week. Mr. Walter was pitching hay in the barn when the rope to which the hay fork was attached broke, imbedding the implement in Mr. Walter's legs near the body. Dr. J. W. Sanborn was called and much anxiety was felt at first concerning Mr. Walter's condition. He is recovering apparently with no serious results.

One of the show places in town is the garden of Fred A. Chute at his home on Main street. Both Mr. Chute and his brother Arthur are interested in horticulture and the beautiful bit of landscape gardening they have done is seldom equalled in a country town. The display of flowers is arranged in attractive groups, the colors blending into a delightful ensemble. Rustic bridges crossing the brook that runs through the grounds make the picture complete.

In "Bluff" that comes to the Star Theatre tonight we have a Sam Wood production. Every picture fan knows what that means. The same Sam Wood who put on the successes, "Prodigal Daughters," "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife" and "The Next Corner" has made "Bluff" his greatest attraction. The story has to do with Betty Hallowell who comes to New York with her brother Jack to make a living. How she does it, finally conquering the city with her great game of "Bluff" makes a colorful tale with a gorgeous setting. Agnes Ayres has the star part and Antonio Moreno will be seen as the brilliant young lawyer, Robert Fitzmaurice, who sees through Betty but loves her just the same.

STRAND THEATRE

That wonderful melodrama, "Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model," has its final showing today. The scene in which Nellie is bound to the tracks of the elevated railway in New York was photographed on a spur of the New York elevated system and is most realistic, as well as abounding in thrills that make the shivers run continuously up and down one's spine. The fire scene in the modiste shop is another thrilling spectacular sequence, as is that of the fight between Walter Peck, the villain, and Jack Carroll, Nellie's sweetheart, in the underground rendezvous of New York's criminal element. The cast is one of the most capable of the season. Claire Windsor has the part of the beautiful cloak model, and never was she more charming or a better actress. The gorgeous gowns and coats, which she wears as the cloak model, set off her blond beauty in striking fashion. Mae Busch makes a deeply human character out of Nellie's chum, Polly Joy. Lew Cody is again a perfect villain, while Hobart Bosworth, Raymond Griffith and Ermund Lowe do most satisfying work in other important roles.

"Thomas Dixon, author of "The Birth of a Nation," wrote the feature picture which will be presented tomorrow and Thursday. "The Mark of the Beast" is a story of the subconscious mind. Following along the line of advance thought, Mr. Dixon has appealed to the intellect by stating that the power of good and evil rests in the sub-sconcious mind, which is only held in check by the power of the will. In the story Mr. Dixon has taken three characters, a doctor, his fiance and a convict. The girl, who has been subject to sleep-walking, suddenly meets the convict and is propelled by an irresistible force within to marry him. How the doctor follows them and is able to save the girl from her impulsive marriage, forms one of the most logical and tensely dramatic stories that has been presented to the motion picture public for some time. Mr. Dixon directed this production personally. He has eliminated everything that does not bear on the story, with the result that "The Mark of the Beast" is a swift moving and tense drama that appeals to the intellect through the emotions.—adv.

PARK THEATRE

Buster Keaton in "Sherlock, Jr," will be shown at the Park Theatre for the last time today.

"Unguarded Women," an Alan Crosland production for Paramount, featuring Bebe Daniels, Richard Dix and Mary Astor is due for showing at the Park Theatre, on Wednesday next to remain for two days.

The story, a gripping drama of love sacrifice and regeneration, was adapted from the Saturday Evening Post serial, "Face." Lucy Stone Terrill is the author, and James Creelman prepared the scenario.—adv.

EMPIRE THEATRE

The feature for today is "The Fool's Awakening," with Enid Bennett, Harrison Ford, Mary Alden and others. In addition is "The Leather Stockings," and the News.

Marie Provost and Monte Blue, whose names have become imbedded in the mind of every film fan by reason of their work in "The Marriage Circle," will be seen next week in another outstanding photoplay. This is no less a picture than Elinor Glyn's "How to Educate a Wife," made into a Warner Brothers Classic of the screen. It comes to the Empire Theatre for two days beginning Wednesday.

That Elinor Glyn was "the greatest woman psychologist in Europe" was the opininon held of her by the late Jack London.—adx.

Use Lemons to Whiten Skin

The only harmless way to bleach the skin white is to mix the juice of two lemons with three ounces of Orchard White, which any druggist will supply for a few cents. Shake well in a bottle, and you have a whole quarter-pint of the most wonderful skin whitener, softener and beautifier.

Massage this sweetly fragrant lemon bleach into the face, neck, arms and hands. It can not irritate. Famous stage beauties use it to bring that clear, youthful skin and rosy-white complexion; also as a freckle, sunburn and tan bleach. You must mix this remarkable lotion yourself. It can not be bought ready to use because it acts best immediately after it is prepared.

Governor Baxter was the first spaker and was followed by Senator Ralph Brewster, Republican candidate for governor, Hon. Wallace H. White, Jr., was present and no one would gone away satisfied had he not spoken. Mrs. Mary Perry Rich was in the company and as she is a great favorite all were anxious to hear her. Several other notables were present but the time was up so no others spoke.

Charles Johnston of Rockland is visiting his brother Edward Johnston at his place of business here.

KITCHEN CUPBOARD

By NELLIE MAXWELL

Eat More Lamb and Mutton

THOSE who object to the flavor of mutton will find if the skin is carefully removed the woolly flavor will go with it. Great care must be taken in dressing mutton. never to let the olly wool touch the flesh of the meat after its removal. The wool is so filled with oil that it imparts the disagreeable odor to the meat if it touches it.

Mutton en Casserole.—Cut a pound (more or less) of mutton cut from the shoulder into serving-sized pieces. Brown in a little fat, add salt and pepper and dredge with flour. Cover with boiling water and one cupful each of fresh carrots cut into cubes and one of peas, with one small onion. Cover and place in a hot oven to cook for three hours. Serve from the casserole.

Roast Leg of Lamb.—Rub the leg of lamb well with salt, pepper and a sweet fat. Place in the roasting pan and sear it well in a hot oven. Now add one-half cupful of water, one cupful of tomato, one onion, six peeled potatoes and roast with the lamb. Baste occasionally and serve with the gravy in the pan.

Mutton Stew.—Take a neck piece and put on to cook in boiling water to cover with one small onion. Simmer until tender, then add a can of peas, thicken the gravy and serve the peas and gravy around the meat. Season well while the lamb is cooking.

Barbecued Lamb.—Take cold roast of lamb, cut into slices and reheat in the following sauce: Take two tablespoonfuls of butter, one-half tablespoonful of vinegar, one-third of a cupful of currant jelly and one-fourth teaspoonful of mustard. Cook until the lamb is well-heated and seasoned.

Chicken Pie.—Cook the chicken as usual, stewing with an onion or clove of garlic. Lay the chicken well-seasoned in the baking dish, removing the onion. Cover with broth and place baking powder biscuit closely over the top. Just before serving add a cupful of good rich cream to the broth in the dish.

A party of gentlemen interested in the paving industry, making a tour of the granite quarries of this section of New England, visited Vinalhaven, and looked over the different quarries here last Thursday and Friday. The Joseph Leopold Company's quarries, considered by them the most extensive paving block operations in this country were examined, the party being conducted by Charles Chillis, who also took them to the Roberts Harbor quarries and to the Jones Granite Co. quarries. Perhaps the most interested member of the party was John Reed of Milford, N. H., who is District Director of the Paving Cutters' Union for New England. It was Mr. Reed's first visit to Vinalhaven and he expressed to the writer his surprise and admiration at the extensive development of these quarries, the number of men employed and the advanced methods of handling the granite and conducting the different operations. The magnitude of the different enterprises excelled anything he has so far seen in any part of this country or Canada. Mr. Reed met many old acquaintances among the paving cutters and we noted from the hearty and jovial reception he received at meeting the individual paving cutters at their berths that he must be exceptionally popular among his fellow workmen. After making a tour of other quarries Mr. Reed will go to Hall Quarry, Somes Sound.

The Bridgeside Follies

On Friday evening last Bridgeside burst forth into activity in the form of an impromptu entertainment held at Granite Hall. Most prominent among the many jokes and hits were the repeated knocks against the nuisance of the glue factory, the stench from which has been causing great annoyance to the residents of Vinalhaven.

The entertainment was conducted in the form of a pageant and a pantomime. The first part of the performance was a pageant of the months, consisting of twelve scenes or tableaux, each scene representing a month, which the audience was expected to guess from its portrayal. The order of presentation was as follows:

May was represented by a Maypole dance; February by several of the town children dressed as valentines. October was represented by all the Bridgeside guests dancing as falling leaves. September was a school scene, in which a good many jokes were made and slams on the glue factory. August was shown by a group of knitters holding down a corner on Bridgeside piazza; a group of hikers; two bathing beauties; a group of picnickers trying to find a place to eat where they couldn't smell the glue factory; and an angler who rowed across the stage in a tub, fished and caught a skate, and who had plenty of "Bait" in a demijohn.

January had snowball fights and skaters; December a Christmas tree and a Santa Claus who distributed amusing presents to the audience, a large portion of the gifts being reminders of the glue factory. November was a football squad; April an umbrella parade; March, winds, blue kites, and Easter bunnies scampered after greens. July had an Independence Day celebration and parade. June had a mock wedding. The ceremony was broadcasted by radio, with much static and interference until finally the bride (who was a man) having lost all hope because of the static interruptions, faints in the arms of her maids and ushers.

The second part of the program was made up of four sketches, consisting of a dwarf dance, with a parody song on names of States; a vaudeville monologue entitled "The Fat and Thin Doctor," who could make fat people thin and thin people fat by one dose of his wonderful medicine, which he employs on two subjects successfully in the presence of the audience.

Miss Crockett, who was the inspiration of all the activity, then announced that an impromptu play would be given, and reading a long list of characters, assigned them to different ones in the audience, who were then lined up before the curtain. When all were in line, expectantly awaiting the next move, Miss Crockett announced that these chosen actors would then be left to use their own interpretation of her play, "The Gathering of the Nuts."

The wind-up was a pantomime farce which played off the old style melodrama.

From the constant shrieks of laughter and hearty applause of the audience, which filled the little hall to standing room only, the Bridgesiders feel that they succeeded in their scheme for giving and having a good time.

THE MARCH OF NATIONS

Made Tremendous Hit At County Fair—Three Hundred Children In Line—Cleared $3300.

Thomaston's County Fair scored another great hit in clearing the splendid sum of $3300.

No one who has ever seen it would willingly miss the Children's Parade of the County Fair and it may be said at this point that no one who saw "The March of the Nations" can fully express the admiration it aroused. One calm observer exclaimed, "I could watch it for two hours," and another said, "Think of the patience and the work and the knowledge represented." The procession of this year was not wholly a children's parade for the subject undertaken was of such proportions that High School students were included, making a fine showing of those for whom the schoolhouse is almost in readiness.

Among the many lands our nearest neighbor, Rock-Land, came first, in the persons of that splendid boy drum corps which set the pace with such perfect beat, and yet did not hurry those who followed them.

Of course the March of the Nations was headed by our own fair Columbia, and a fine Uncle Sam, followed by a miscellaneous group of color bearers in colonial costume and continental garb. Then came a huge flat flag borne by 20 girls in red, white and blue, and some smaller patriotic groups of which a Liberty Belle, and a 2½-year-old Uncle Sam, accompanied by an equally diminutive Columbia, were decided features.

Japan's flag-bearer introduced all the colors and many of the accessories of that land of cherry-blossoms—parasols, fans, lanterns, geisha girls and even a real jinricksha drawn by runners.

* * * *

A bold Jack Tar carried the flag of England accompanied by six other sailors who gave way to a life-sized John Bull with all the pomposity of that familiar figure. English country life was symbolized by Bo-Peep, a dainty May Queen with train of white rose petals borne by her pages, and a rainbow hued May-pole whose many streamers were carried by the fairiest of English girlhood. But at the base of the pole was a real rose-bud, set in a bouquet of roses, and one of the sweetest bits of this fascinating moving picture. Gallant British redcoats "led the rear," followed by Highland lassies with the flag of bonny Scotland.

The spirit of Ireland carrying the harp, was preceded by the green flag, and followed by a band of Irish lads and colleens. Hayracks, two real goats led by some determined boys from the Emerald Isle, and green parasol girls with shamrock-decked gowns completed this group.

A victorious Toreador carried the flag of sunny Spain, having an escort of several equally patriotic bull-fighters. The pony with the paniers and water-bottles at his sides introduced a very realistic touch. The Spanish Cavalier was so dashing that it was no wonder that he was followed by a large group of senoritas in their silken shawls, mantellas and with roses in their hair.

Classic Greece was represented by a slave-borne litter in which reposed a fair lady. This was attended by Greek dancers in delicate hues wearing chaplets of flowers and carrying garlands.

The Maid of Orleans on a snow-white (?) charger bore the banner of France. She was followed by lines of French Liberty girls bearing the flag of the republic and by a troop of small soldiers and peasant maids. The fleur-de-lis was a demoiselle with the lily for headgear and an appropriately decorated cart as her vehicle. And behind all flopped two Pierrot rag dolls, imported directly from the Rue de la Paix.

* * * *

Chinese pig tails there were in numbers, and Eskimos from the Polar regions who bore the heat of the day most stoically. The star and the crescent carried one back to the Arabian Nights, for here were a veritable winged steed, a magic carpet, and alluring veiled ladies with melting eyes. Even Siam had its place in the line of march, and no elephant which has visited Knox xCounty ever made such an impression as did the majestic beast which obediently followed his Hindu master who guided him with a golden spear. Nor was there ever a more royal Princeling than he who was attended by a faithful ebony fan-bearer.

No land is dearer to the youthful of all ages than is Make Believe Land and so next we saw many strange and some beautifull sights—a cloud of butterflies drawing their lovely green, autumn leaves, a valentine, an elf, a clown, Indians, cats, etc.

And last came the foundation of all lands which is Babyland. And its banner? Why, two fetching Kewpies on a "baby-blue" ground. Carriages trimmed in delicate colors and holding the fairest of treasures marked this closing portion of the parade and tiny tots strung together with colored ribbons made a sight which appealed to every observer.

The masses of color, the effective groupings, the perfection of the individual costumes and the indescribable charm of childhood and the youth made a picture long to be remembered.

* * * *

About 300 children took part in this already effective and established League of Nations and everyone who saw it agreed it was worthy of the best day that could be produced.

It is only fair to the committee who have been working night and day for weeks on this really gigantic project to say that the ranks were necessarily a bit thinned by the delay and this same condition affected both entertainments to some degree. But all who have ever been in the work of "getting things up," know the difficulties to be met and will make just allowance.

Directly following The March of the Nations came the afternoon entertainment "The Nations at Play," in which many of the same characters figured.

Columbia's solo dance, Uncle Sam's entrance, John Bull's song in which he "introduced a sailor if the King's Navee," the singing game "On the Bridge of Avignon" done by wee soldiers and maids, and the inimitable dance of the Pierrot rag dolls formed the first part. At interlude was presented a small negro mammy who rocked her pickaninny to the humming chorus of the girls of America who formed the background of the stage. Part two began with a jolly dance of Irish shillaly boys and lilting maids. The Japanese sailor-man song was accompanied by eight fetching geishas with their fan dance the tiniest being brought on in a tea box. A spirited Highland fling brought the entertainment to a Star Spangled Banner finale.

* * * *

In the evening the tent was again packed for the vaudeville which featured such talent as Maynard Beebe, the popular clog dancer; Mac Gilchrest, a favorite entertainer, in recitations; a most unexpected exhibition of the highly trained elephant, Bruno, in the care of his Hindu keeper, closing with a spirited rendering of the tango; Oscar Hodgkins in amusing monologue; graceful Miss Adelaide Cross in her charming Butterfly Dance, accompanied by Miss Alcada Hall; Miss Katlan, a dramatic reader of Boston, whose generosity was much appreciated by the management; Miss Gladys Long in a piano medley of old songs, and last of all and the hit of the evening, as the other performers would readily admit, Oscar Butler, who said "perhaps he could sing better if he was 76 years older," but who set his audience in gales of laughter with his comic songs, delivered in a voice which was marvellously strong and clear. Mrs. Jeannie Butler was at the piano and all look forward to hearing this popular number at a future time.

The hard work of those in charge was greatly lightened by the cheerful response of all who assisted, both Thomastonians and outside friends. It is of course absolutely impossible to give public credit to all who joined in this great effort, but without the co-operation of our good neighbors, The Courier-Gazette and the Knox Messenger, we would have been badly handicapped, and without the fine lighting facilities provided by the Central Maine Power Co. the dollars in our coffers would have been far less. So to them and to all, our thanks, and best wishes for meeting another season at the Thomaston County Fair.

NORTH HAVEN

Dr. John Wesley Hill and Mrs. Tillinghast will address the Republican meeting at Library hall at 7.30 p. m. Friday.

The dedication and fair, postponed from last week, will be held Thursday, Aug. 28. The schedule for the day will be carried out as previously planned. The parade will start at 1 p. m. and it is essential to get under way promptly. The dedication exercises will be held at the fountain. At the close of these exercises the fair for the benefit of the Boston Children's Hospital and the North Haven Baptist church will be opened. Every-one in town is urged to take a half holiday and make the afternoon a great success.

NORWOOD-CARROLL FAMILIES

CAMDEN

Fred Irish is down from Waltham, Mass., for a visit of several weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Hopkins and Mr. and Mrs. Ray Hopkins motored to Bangor Saturday and were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Carl H. Hopkins.

Emery Horton of Boston is the guest of his mother, Mrs. Leroy Horton.

William E. Gill of Boston is with his family at the lake for a two weeks stay. Mr. Gill is building a fine cottage there on the lot purchased of Mrs. Dudley Talbot.

Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Groves are guests of Mrs. Groves' sister, Mrs. Walter Conley.

The auction party given at the Camden Yacht Club Saturday afternoon for the benefit of the Public Library book fund was a most happy success. More than $200 is now in the hands of the committee as a result of the affair and it is expected that the amount will reach a still larger figure. The tables looked very attractive each with a small bud-vase and silver standard, holding sweet peas. These served as a prize souvenir of the occasion. A lunch of sandwiches, cake and tea was served.

News of the death of Capt. Louis Thorsen came as a great shock to Camden friends, following as it did that of his six-year-old daughter, who died a few days before. The Thorsens have made their home in Camden for several years and only recently moved to Rockport. Capt. Thorsen died Sunday at the age of 30 years, and leaves a widow and son less than one year old to whom sympathy is extended.

Jed Hawkins' Big Bass Drum

By GEORGE ELMER COBB

Boom - boom - boom - boom-boom! Stridently out upon the air came the measured beat of a big bass drum. Stalwart, free-armed, Jed Hawkins stood at his task as resolutely as a maestro at the baton stand.

Below him, propped in a low tree crotch, was a homemade sheet of music, its sparse notes big as eggs. This was his "score."

Over the neighboring fence old Seth Brown protruded his broad tanned face, set all in a capacious grin.

"What ye think yer doin', Jed?" he propounded.

"Practicing," was the terse, serious reply.

"You call that music!" derided Brown.

"'Twill be, when it mixes in with the rest of the band."

"What band?"

"The village band—I've just joined it. There's just as much system to a drum as there is to a flute."

Seth Brown went on his way, chuckling. He had a poor opinion of Jed Hawkins. In the first place, his pretty daughter, Nellie, liked Jed. In the next place, she had her pick of several richer swains.

"I'll admit Jed is stiddy," ruminated the practical old man, "but he's slow and poky."

"Slow but sure," was the way Nellie put it to herself. "Dear fellow! I'll wait fifty years for him, if I have to."

"A little extra money—everything counts," reflected patient, honest Jed. "The band gets four dollars a head an evening for playing at dances. Next winter it will be three times a week—" boom-boom-boom-boom-boom! and Jed proceeded industriously to beat out the notes of his score.

"Well, dear," Nellie challenged him, and he turned to face his loyal sweetheart, bright-faced and cheery as usual—"how are you getting on?"

"I can play the whacks where they're marked to come in," explained Jed.

Nellie carried the town newspaper in her hand. This she opened and held it before the face of her lover, her dainty forefinger indicating a great black type advertisement.

"Look, dear," she directed, and Jed read it in his slow, accurate way.

"A thousand dollars reward," he said. "I'd find the child for nothing, if I could. Poor little tot! No clue, eh?"

"No," replied Nellie; "the paper says that Ida Strong has been kidnaped and probably carried to a distance. Her parents are frantic. Their only hope that, once they get safely in hiding, those who stole her will offer her for ransom.

"When is your first band playing?" asked Nellie, changing the subject.

"Saturday night. It isn't a very select dance, or I'd ask you to go. It's over at Jung's Corners. They're a rough lot around there, you know. Their shindigs generally break up in a row."

A great clumsy carryall conveyed the rural band over to Jung's Corners on Saturday evening.

When the last number was played they stored their instruments and accepted the invitation to supper from the proprietor of the place.

Jed was the first of the party to go after his instrument. When he got into the poorly-lighted storeroom he rolled his bulky drum near the door. A thin, piping wail proceeded from beyond a door in one corner of the room. Jed unslid the bolt.

"Gracious me!" he ejaculated, and well he might. In a wretched adjoining apartment a little child lay sobbing on a pallet.

"Ida Strong!" gasped Jed, and then he advanced towards the child. The light from the dancing hall permeated the room. "Don't you know me, Ida?"

"Oh, yes, sure I do!" palpitated the little one, putting up her thin, wavering hands. "Oh, Mr. Hawkins! Please take me away from here. I've been locked up for a week, and I heard them say they were going to take me farther from home tomorrow."

"Do just as I tell you," whispered Jed, an exciting thought coming into his mind.

As the cornet player appeared and took up his instrument Jed sang out:

"Help me get this clumsy old baggage of mine into the wagon, will you? Go easy—that's it," and he gave a great breath of relief as the big drum was hoisted aboard the carryall.

As the horses reached the top of the last hill overlooking the home town he pulled the drum towards him. He unstrung its great moon-faced top.

"All right, little one!" he hailed, and the child he had secreted in the big, roomy drum put out her arms and climbed into his lap.

His companions in the carryall stared at child and man in open-mouthed wonder. Their eyes goggled as he told of his unique plan to rescue her.

"You see, some of that lawless gang down at the Corners had her hidden away in Jung's place," explained Jed.

"And you get a thousand dollars!" shouted the leader of the band.

"Yes, the reward is yours," chorused half a dozen voices.

"Not so slow and poky, after all," commented Farmer Brown, when he came to know that Jed Hawkins had fairly won the price of a home for his pretty daughter, Nellie.

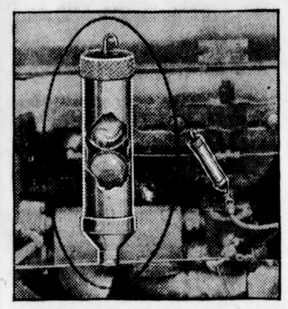
NOCARB

Will Positively Remove Carbon From Your Motor and Keep It Clean. RESULTING IN:



Clean Motor with More Power

Smoother Operation with Less Fuel Consumption

Clean Spark Plugs and Less Valve Grinding

NOCARB attached to Nash Six. Pat. Applied For.

GUARANTEE: IF, after driving 500 miles, results as above promised are not obtained, the NOCARB may be returned and your money will be refunded.

PROVEN RESULTS

Mr. John Bird, Mgr., NOCARB MFG. CO., Camden, Maine. Boston, Mass., July 28, 1924.

Dear Sir:

I placed one of your NOCARBS on my Dodge car in April when there was considerable carbon in the cylinders.

I have driven the car 7,000 miles since that time and the carbon not only disappeared but has staid out and the car is free from carbon today.

I also find I get a much quicker pick up and more power since I put the NOCARB on my car.

Very truly yours,
CARL P. MELLOWS,
Former Adv. Mgr. of the A. L. A.

NOCARB MFG. CO., Camden, Maine. Bangor, Maine, August 11, 1924.

Gentlemen:

You will recall the day during the latter part of June when I purchased one of your NOCARBS, that I complained of a carbon knock in my Hudson Sedan—Well, after driving 75 miles with the NOCARB attached, the knock disappeared, and I have driven over 2000 miles since with the car apparently developing the maximum amount of power.

Yesterday I removed the cylinder head from my car and, to my astonishment, there was not a particle of carbon in sight and the spark plugs were as clean as if they were new.

I certainly am pleased with NOCARB.

Sincerely,
A. H. PIERCE, State Fish Warden.

The same results can be obtained with marine motors. Write for circulars.

Mrs. J. M. Baldrige's series of Monday evening dances at "The Barn" are drawing to a close. The dances beginning in June have been attended by an increasingly large number of guests who have thoroughly enjoyed the delightful hospitality of Mrs. Baldrige, dispensed so generously and freely. Mr. Champagne's orchestra has proved to be unexcelled—a continual and inspiring invitation to the dance. "The Barn" itself, situated on the magnificent estate of Benjamin F. Smith (Mrs. Baldrige's father) at Warrenton, set in the beautiful trees and its interior aglow with color and softly shaded lights has offered an ideal place for these entertainments. Guests from foreign shores, as well as from afar and neighboring states, have enjoyed these dances, and last evening manifested their appreciation of Mrs. Baldrige's hospitality with the presentation of a beautiful set of Mah Jong, the presentation being made at intermission by J. C. Perry on behalf of the hundreds of her guests.

Long Tunic Frocks Theme Paramount in Fashion Realm

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

The tunic is the theme paramount in fashion's realm just now. Long, longer, longest marks the way of these new tunics. Most of them begin at the neck and never stop until they reach within a few inches of the skirt hem. Some of these below-the-knee blouses, if one may consider them so, are very straightlined, indeed, suffering not even a belt or girdle to interrupt their course toward the lower edge of the skirt over which they are posed. Others are more lenient, shirring in just a little at the neck, fastening stylishly down one side and permitting a graceful long tasseled girdle, just as the model in the picture shows. However, when it comes to length, please observe there is no compromise, for the trend is decidedly toward an era of long tunics. This very genteel afternoon frock of our illustration is fashioned of rust-colored flat crepe, bordered with squares cut from deep rosewood-toned velvet.

Many of the tunic dresses for fall show a heavily-patterned border around the lower edge, done in ornate embroidery, or, as in the case of an exclusive model in Lanvin green, hand-painted in bold floral design.

Among the practical long tunic modes those of black satin are interestingly featured with trimmings of white. The unbelted idea is carried out, with a long front opening at the neck, faced with white, working into a turnover collar at the back. A white crepe necktie, whose streamer ends are knotted and then let flow to the lower edge of the tunic, is an imposing style-touch. The sleeves reveal a white facing, for the mode for black-and-white is confirmed in advance fall dress collections.

Capelets inset at the back lend distinctive style to these slenderized tunic silhouettes in some instances. The newest capelet attachment is split up the back, so as to show either a white or vivid lining. Fine plaitings below the waist depth are also used in the manner of a capelet in the latest long-tunic frocks.

Not infrequently the skirt contrasts the long tunic. However, its relationship to it is proved in that collars, cuffs, revers and other accessory trimmings are of the same material as the underskirt, itself merely showing as a border as it drops below the tunic. Printed cotton tunics, gay of color or in black-and-white, are stylish for summer, posed over skirts of solid color.

SHOWERED WITH GOLD

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Skinner, 50 Years Married, Surrounded By Children On Anniversary.

The golden wedding annivrsary of C. C. and Arvilla (Colby) Skinner was celebrated recently at Hate-to-quit-it cottage, Port Clyde. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. Bert Skinner, Framingham, Mass.; Miss Eula Skinner, Warren; Mrs. Myrtle Wincapaw, Port Clyde; Mrs. Marion Dalrymple, Attleboro, Mass.; Elmer, Marguerite, Edith and Alice Wincapaw, Port Clyde; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Webb, Miss Clara Eastman, Miss Nancy Eastman, and C. O. Dalrymple.

An anniversary dinner was served, at the conclusion of which the family orators had their say, and they said it with gold, and other substantial gestures.

Capt. Skinner was born in Appleton 81 years ago. During the Civil War he was wounded at Cold Harbor and Petersburg. For some years he had charge of the Port Clyde lighthouse and is now retired on a pension.

Mr. and Mrs. Skinner have these children: Mrs. Nellie Pratt, Kennebunkport; Bert Skinner, Framingham, Mass.; Mrs. Myrtle Wincapaw, Port Clyde; Miss Eula Skinner, Warren, and Mrs. Marion Dalrymple, Attleboro, Mass.

O'HARA-SINGHI

James J. O'Hara, organist at the Strand Theatre and the First Baptist church was married Sunday afternoon in Beachmont, Mass., to Miss Kathleen Singhi of Rockland. Rev. John V. Cronan was the officiating clergyman, the ceremony being performed in the presence of relatives. Joseph Norton of Beverly, Mass., was groomsman and Mrs. Norton was matron of honor. The couple will reside at 80 Park street, Rockland, whither they will be cordially welcomed by their many friends.

Prior to three years ago Mr. O'Hara was engaged in the insurance business as a representative of the Pennsylvania Fire Insurance Co. in Boston. H had for six years been organist at the church of Our Lady of Lourdes in Beachmont and St. Rose church in Chelsea, and had played in the Broadway Theatre, South Boston, and Fenway Theatre, Boston. Prior to coming to Rockland, July 17, 1923, he had been organist for 18 months at the Lancaster Theatre in Boston. He has studied with Howe Humphrey at the New England Conservatory, John O'Shea, organist of St. Cecilia's church, Back Bay; Edith Lang, organist of Exeter Theatre, Back Bay; and Roy L. Frazee, organist in New Bedford, Mass. These exceptional opportunities, coupled with his valuable experience and natural musical genius have combined to make him one of the best organists in New England.

The bride is a daughter of Mrs. Georgia E. Singhi, and has been locally prominent in music circles. She was prsident of the Harmony Club four years, and is a member of the executive board of the Rubinstein Club. She graduated from Rockland High School in 1910.

The honeymoon tour on which the couple are now engaged takes them to New York, Atlantic City and home via Philadelphia.

CHAUTAUQUA

TO THE BUSINESS MEN IN ROCKLAND AND NEIGHBORING TOWNS!

Within a few days Rockland will be having its next annual Chautauqua and since it is upon the business men of any community that the burden of almost every successful enterprise falls, I want you this year to get the maximum benefit out of the Chautauqua.

There is a popular misconception abroad about the nature of Chautauquas in general. Some think it is sort of a revival service with dry lectures. Others think it is something the church people bring to town to convert sinners. Some think it consists of study classes and others think it is a high-brow entertainment good only for the intellectuals.

Now, whatever other Chautauquas may be, I want to correct right now any impression of this sort about Community Chautauquas. We have this year what I regard as the best talent in America. Our dramatic performances, our musical programs and our speakers represent the highest standards of merit heretofore achieved anywhere in the United States.

If you have ever heard a finer show than "Three Wise Fools" on the opening night of Chautauqua, our superintendent will refund to you the price of your season ticket, if you will speak to him at the close of the performance the opening night.

You have heard a lot about classic dancing in the big cities. This year Community Chautauquas is bringing on the second night "Ange", one of the most noted of interpretive dancers.

I consider Green's Band program the finest I have ever heard in America, not excepting Sousas band, Kryls' band or any other of the famous band organizations in this country.

These sound like extravagant statements and after you hear the talent you may disagree with me. In that case I suggest that you make comparison with the programs of other Chautauquas and then arrange next year to have the Chautauquas which you think is best.

We have three lectures this year that no one of you business men ought to miss. There is Charles Isaacson the second afternoon on "The Real Estate Value on Fine Music." There is Howard Wisehaupt the third night, nationally known as "the pep man" on "the Human Element in Business." And there is William McCullough universally known as "Mac" who talks intimately and clearly so you can understand him about the problems of capital and labor.

If your stores are supposed to be open at the time any one of there lectures is scheduled on the program, it will pay you to put a little placard up in the window of your store saying that you and your clerks are all at Chautauqua and the store will be re-opened within a few minutes after the close of the Chautauqua session.

I want you business men to feel at home when you and your friends come to our Chautauqua. If you like to smoke you can sit at the edge of the tent and enjoy your favorite cigar or cigarette during the course of the program.

If our Superintendent or any of our talent or others connected with our institution start to preach to you and tell you what you ought to do, let me know and I will fire that individual so quickly that he won't know what has hit him.

I hope you will enjoy every show on the program. If you don't, it isn't my fault.

LORING J. WHITESIDE, President.

BIG POWER PROPOSITIONS

Knox and Lincoln Counties To Benefit By Undertakings Of Central Maine Power Company.

Four important pieces of power construction which will mean much to the communities served by Central Maine Power Company are now either undergoing the preliminary plans of development or are already underway by the company's engineers.

The first of these is an interesting bit of power manipulation which will mean that the power generated at two of the company's stations, Rice Rips and Oakland, on the Messalonskee Stream above Waterville, will always be available even though the trunk line of the company, which passes through Waterville on its way to the company's distribution station at Fort Halifax from Skowhegan, should be put out of commission temporarily.

Heretofore the power from these two stations connected with the trunk line at Waterville. Consequently if trouble occurred on the trunk line between Skowhegan and Fort Halifax—Waterville being between—the power from the two Messalonskee stations could also be unavailable. By running a separate line from the Messalonskee stations directly into the Fort Halifax station the company has made doubly sure that this power from the Messalonskee would always be available at the central point of distribution to send out anywhere over the company's interconnected system.

Another power connection which although not large in size, but nevertheless important because it is in line with the policy in use by the larger power companies all over the United States, is the increasing of the interconnection facilities with the Mills Light and Power Company. Last summer Central Maine Power Company completed its lines to connect with the Mills Company. Thus in case of power shortage in one territory power might be purchased from the other. Since this interconnection the Mills company has so increased its output that it needs additional power. To meet those demands together with a tremendous increase in power consumption in its own territory at Dover-Foxcroft, Central Maine Power Company has increased its transmission lines running from Guilford to Dover-Foxcroft and thence to connect with the Milo Company at Sebec from 11,000 to 22,000 volts.

Increases Rockland's Facilities

A similar construction in that it is the result of added demands for more power is the building of a duplicate transmission line from Union to Rockland. Rockland and towns in that vicinity get their power over two lines—one coming from the company's distribution point at Winslow and the other from Augusta in the shape of the letter Y—which join at Maxey's and then continue as one line to Union and Rockland.

The present plans of the company are to duplicate the portion of this line which runs from Union to Rockland. This will insure a more steady and reliable source of power into Rockland from Union even though one of the lines between these two points should be temporarily "out" on account of line trouble.

The new line will make it possible also to carry more power into the Rockland territory to meet the demands of its local power and light consumers.

Lincoln County Property

By far the biggest job of its present power program and one which is of tremendous importance, at least to power users in Lincoln county, is the interconnection of Central Maine Power Company's system with that of the Lincoln County Power and Light Company which it recently purchased. Previously the power consumers of this territory were handicapped for lack of power facilities. In periods of prolonged drought the power resources of this Lincoln County Company were inadequate. Yet but a few miles away were the high voltage lines of Central Maine Power Company which because of its varied sources of hydro-electric and steam power supply could fill a long felt want in the Lincoln county territory.

Now with the acquisition of this company by Central Maine it is relatively easy to connect the two existing lines. This interconnection will work out to the decided betterment of the people in Lincoln county towns and at the same time afford Central Maine Power Company system a valuable source of supply at a strategic point in this locality. It is expected that this interconnection will be completed by the first of October.

With the completion of these power constructions he self-same system Central Maine Power Company will be materially benefited and better able to serve its customers with more reliable and steady power.

SUPPORTS BREWSTER

Because His Program Embraces True Democracy and Religious Freedom.

Editor of The Courier-Gazette:—

In a recent speech Mr. Pattangall opened fire on Senator Brewster" as follows:

"Senator Brewster's principal effort in the last Legislature was to recommend an amendment to our Constitution forbidding the appropriation of money in support of sectarian schools. There are ten such schools receiving State aid at the present time. The total appropriation amounts to $27,000, of which two Catholic schools receive $7,000."

Mr. Pattangall endorses these sectarian appropriations as follows: "It has been the policy of Maine from the beginning in accordance with the provisions of our Constitution to make special appropriations from time to time as circumstances of the people may require in aid of academies, colleges and seminaries."

In other words it has been the policy of Maine to support sectarian schools. Yes, and "from the beginning" until recently "it has been the policy of Maine" to tag women who own property, and to deprive them of the right of suffrage and representation. But taxation without representation is tyrny, and taxation for the support of sectarian schools is tyrny, also.

Bishop William Brown, of Galion, Ohio, who was recently convicted of tyrny by the Protestant Episcopal church, claims that all life, all creation, all civilization sprung from matter and force. He also believes that Jesus is a myth, that such a historic character never existed. The Bishop claims that the belief in a personal God and immortality is a superstition and the source of intellectual and spiritual slavery; a stumbling block to progression and civilization. If the Bishop and his followers should establish a school in which his doctrine should be taught, and if Christians who claim that a belief in a personal God and immortality is the basic virtue on which morality and civilization rest, should be taxed to support such a school, it would be the height of injustice and sectarian despotism.

On the other hand, to tax Bishop Brown and his followers to support sectarian schools is undemocratic and tyrannical.

General Grant said, "Resolve that not one dollar appropriated to them (free schools) shall be applied to the support of any sectarian school; that neither state nor nation shall support institutions save those where every child in the land may get common school education unmixed with atheistic, pagan or sectarian teachings."

Great minds differ. While Gen. Grant opposed the appropriation of one dollar for sectarian schools, Mr. Pattangall favors the appropriation of $27,000 by Maine, which would mean more than $27,000,000 by the nation.

Mr. Pattangall tells us there is "no need for amendment." If I understand his attitude he would leave it with the Legislature to protect our religious rights.

True democracy, the democracy of Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln, recognizes the rights of the minority, and demands that those rights be protected by Constitutional laws. If Mr. Pattangall should leave his individual rights with the Legislature, and if he is a Catholic, he may wake up some morning and find his religious freedom numbered among things in the past."

About the first thing the Ku Klux Klan did when they got control in Oregon was to abolish the parochial schools, which robbed the Catholics of their religious rights. The Catholics appealed to the Court and it was decided that the law abolishing parochial schools was unconstitutional.

Our religious rights should be protected by an amendment to the National Constitution. No state should have the right to deprive the minority of their religious freedom.

A word regarding the Ku Klux Klan. Henry Ward Beecher said, "If I should see the Devil trying to pull a poor fellow out of the gutter, I would take hold of his cloven paw and pull with him." When we see the Ku Klux Klan pulling for temperance and endorsing candidates for high office who demand a complete separation of Church and State, then we should "pull" with them. But when we see them committing acts of violence, see them whipping women to death, see they trying to deprive Catholics and Liberals of their rights, then we should "pull" against them.

I shall support Senator Brewster because his program embraces more true Democracy, religious freedom and progress than that of Mr. Pattangall.

Miss Arline Flanagan Won the Nursing Bottle Race At Camp Benson.

The annual outing and field day of the employes of the Bangor division of the New England Telephone & Telegraph Co., was held Saturday at Camp Benson, Lake Sebastiscook, with 250 in attendance. A gala day was observed in general with an exceptionally fine program of sports being carried out.

The morning's program started off with a baseball game between a team representing the Maine Division and a team representing the Bangor district. In a close and hard fought struggle the former won by a score of 5 to 3. The forenoon winners, however, ran up against a Tartar, in the afternoon game, in a nine contest of members of the Cable department, the scores being three to nothing in favor of the Cable boys. Both games were good and enjoyed by large crowds.

At noon all directed their steps toward the pavilion at the lake, where the Union Busy Bees' society of the High Street Christian church in Newport had prepared a delicious chicken dinner. The morning's excitement and sport had added a touch of sharpness to the appetites and the bounteous meal was well justified. Dancing followed the dinner.

The winners in the various sporting events during the day included: Miss Arline Flanagan of Rockland, the nursing bottle race.

Miss Flanagan, 1st and Miss Cullinan, 2d, in 50-yard dash.

The tug of war for girls, Bangor vs Rockland. The Bangor team was Miss Kenney, Miss Coleman, Miss Kennedy, Miss Cullinan. The Rockland's were: Miss A. Flanagan, Miss P. Flanagan, Miss M. Clark and Miss D. Clark, Banger won.

The tug of war for the men between the Rockland linemen and the cable department, was won by linemen Saulsbury, Bridge, Purcell, Bonie and Mcholland. Lester, Murphy, Winch, Buck and Lawson represented the cable department.

STRENGTHENS ADMINISTRATION

Republican Policy Can Be Pointed To With Pride—The Grangers Bring President Coolidge Cheer.

A strong exposition of the Administration's foreign policy and a vigorous defense of that policy characterize an article on foreign relations in the Republican campaign textbook.

The article is not signed, but it was given out definitely by a high official of the Republican National Committee that it was prepared by Secretary Hughes and that it is a part of the more extended review and exposition of the Administration's foreign policy which will be made public in a few days. This more extended document will constitute the real textbook of the campaign on the subject of foreign relations.

"It would be difficult," says the article, "to imagine a worse tangle in our foreign relations than that with which the Republican Administration was required to deal when it came into power on March 4, 1921.

"The situation was a most difficult one, as opportunities for disputes lay on every hand, while the chances of finding adequate means of accommodation were extremely meager. These difficulties have largely been removed.

In summing up of the Administration's foreign policy the Republican character of that policy is emphasized and contrasted with the Democratic. The summary in part follows:

The Democratic platform said the Republican party had no foreign policy. It said nothing about Democratic foreign policy except that the party would make the country take the place of leadership in the world affairs which God intended it to take. That, of course, means nothing whatever. The difference seems to me that the Republican party has a definite policy on which it acts, whereas the Democratic party takes a great deal about a policy which it hopes some time to have, but is unable to define.

"The Administration realizes that its duty is to advance the interests of the American people. It understands also that in foreign affairs the greatest good of America must be the greatest good of the world. This means that we must play the game fairly and honorably.

"Much of what the Administration has done brings no immediate advantage, but is building for the future. Every step that makes for world peace is a forward step, and no single four years in American history can show so many forward steps.

"The Washington conference resulted in a real limitation of naval armament, put a stop to the ruinous race in the building of capital ships [illegible] and [illegible] discussions on disarmament carried on in the League of Nations.

"Some people seem to have the perverted idea that only by joining the League of Nations can the United States be of maximum benefit to the world. Their idea is, apparently, that the American people are naturally selfish, unwilling to take their share of world burdens unless forced to do so. The Republican Administration, on the other hand, has faith in the American people, and that faith has been justified. While the League of Nations talked America fed the starving Russians; while the league groped about America suggested a plan to solve the reparation tangle and bring peace to Europe. To become a member of the league would be to pool our influence, to become involved in the European political tangle, whereas, independent, we can and do assist and advise when assistance and advice are useful. These things the American people are beginning to understand.

"The Republican Administration intends to give full protection to American citizens and to their legitimate interests in all parts of the world.

"It would be cowardly for America to sacrifice its own interests. Because, however, we are powerful and rich the Administration has no desire to dominate. No one knows better than the President the value of sacrifice, that it is sometimes necessary to give up the immediate advantage for the sake of the greater ultimate good. Republicans do not favor a private party, that the battle runs. The Democratic party is playing with fire. Senator La Follette has been one of its leaders to be Vice-Presidential candidate. It is against La Follettism that the issue obtains.

"The Washington conference, as it asserted, dispelled war clouds and promoted good will.

"The Administration of United States favors the world court, according to the article. That is refuted by the fact that President Harding proposed membership in the court and that President Coolidge has repeatedly advocated joining it.

"Charges to prevent rum running and work to stop international [illegible] which have characterized in the last few years the relations between the United States and the Latin-American republics have also [illegible] discussions on disarmament carried on in the League of Nations.

A PARAMOUNT ISSUE

Why Voters Should Not Hesitate About Doing Their Duty This Year.

The menace of the dethronement of the Supreme Judicial Court and the unsettling of the foundations of our government as at present constituted, arouses many voters to the need of the hour.

People are, after all, going to vote straight and take care of State issues later. That can be done. The fight is between Coolidge and La Follette—with Gen. Dawes in the background as the great power that puts the Republican ticket double-proof against danger. Gen. Dawes has saved the European situation. What more worthy to be on a ticket?

The present structure of American government is not a sudden thing—nor is it to be suddenly upset. Business demands a stable government under protective principles; for the nation has been universally more prosperous under a tariff that takes care of the home-market. Society demands reasonable protection in wise laws—not in revolutions.

The great fundamental policy of the La Follette party is that it proposes a complete change in our courts. The present dominancy of the Supreme Court in interpreting laws is opposed to all. John Marshall, a great man, confirmed it. Great Democrats and great Republicans and great Federalists defend it. Mr. Davis, a good lawyer, defends it. It is not against him, or the Democratic party, that the battle runs. The Democratic party is playing with fire. Senator La Follette has been one of its leaders to be Vice-Presidential candidate. It is against La Follettism that the issue obtains.

YOUR FAVORITE POEM.

If I had to live my life again I would have made a rule to read some poetry and listen to some music at least once a week. The loss of these pleasures is a loss of happiness.—Charles Darwin.

A PRAYER

O God, our Father, if we had but fruit! Lost fruit—which then purchases Dole let us lose, but all the warped fruit

Be there in song and dance, That we might gain, in searching subtler and subtler ways, Thy boundless heaven hidden in Thy world.

If blindly groping, he shall oft mistake, And follow tempting notes That lead them stars, and the sea voice fade Of Wisdom for the notes Which making Beauty utter here and there, Thou surely will forgive him, and forbear!

Oh, love us, for we love thee, Maker—God! And would even near thy hand, And call thee "Father, Father," from the dust Where for our grosser sin sinned hands are set to touch, fearless of scorn or blame, Thy garment's hem, which Truth and God are name.

—Edgar Lucien Hill.

THE IBIS IS COMING

The lighthouse tender Ibis, which is coming on this station in place of the Zizania, is not expected for several weeks, as she is still undergoing repairs at Staten Island, N. Y. Captain Falkenham, of the Zizania, is expected to go on about the first of September to look her over, and will bring her here when ready. The steamer has been undergoing extensive repairs, as some time ago she suffered considerably from a fire which practically destroyed everything above the decks. In addition to the new work the steamer's boilers and engines have received a thorough overhauling and she will be in perfect condition when she takes her place on the Portland station in September.
