CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Weel Beginning Sept. 29, 1912.

ic.-Missionary boldness.-Acts iv. 13, Edited by Rev. Sherman H. Doyle, 23-31. D. D. The early history of the Christian church is a striking proof of its divine origin, and in no particular is this more evident than in the wonderful change that took place in the apostles of Christ. At the crucifixion of Christ they were cowards and forsook Him and fied. After Pentecost they exemplified a "holy boldness" that has been the wonder of the world. On the day of Pentecost Peter, who had cringed before the finger of an accusing maid at the trial of Christ, denounced His executioners as murderers and called upon them to repent and be saved. When a short time after Peter and John were arrested for preaching the gospel, instead of being made timid and weak by a night in prison, they proclaimed the truth with such boldness that the people who heard them marveled at their freedom and outspokenness. Such a change could only have had its origin in God.

Missionary boldness is historic. What missionary has not been bold? It has always required a courageous spirit to go as a missionary. Dangers have to be constantly faced. There have been perils on land and on sea, perils to physical health and to mental well be ing, perils from persecution, based hatred and fanaticism of the bitupon terest kind. These dangers have not only been faced, but actually suffered even unto death. And what mission-ary has ever faltered because of peril? Did Paton hesitate to face the fierce cannibals of the New Hebrides? Did Robert Moffat falter even when the weapons of the hostile natives of Africa were leveled at him? Did the missionaries of China ever turn back because they were in danger of being shot or burned to death? There is no record of conspicuous cowardice in all missionary history; but, on the other hand, there are innumerable instances recorded of sublime and heroic boldness. Such examples of Christian heroism should inspire us to stand for "the truth as it is in Jesus" against all criticism and all opposition.

Missionary boldness has ever been ef fective in spreading the gospel. Cow ards never win adherents, but bold men secure many followers. This has been true in all missionary labors. Pe ter and John won converts by their dauntlessness. Persecution failed. Their enemies could not punish them "be cause of the people, for all glorified God for that which was done." It has ever been so. History in this respect been constantly repeating itself. Paul many times faced death, but by his boldness won those who were his worst enemies. The courage of Robert Moffat in the face of an angry mob, when he threw open his coat and bade them strike, won the day for the cause of Christianity. All Christian work requires more or less courage, and in being bold we only insure the success of all our labors and under takings in the name of Christ.

Missionary boldness has its source in Jesus Christ. Christ Himself exemplified the highest type of courage. In the crisis of His life, when He knew what the final outcome would be, He 'steadfastly set His face toward Jerusalem." This boldness Christ imparts to His disciples.

Peter and John, fishermen, unlearned in many respects, once timid and fear-ful, now boldly proclaimed doctrines that were hateful to those about them The whole explanation lay in the fact "that they had been with Jesus." He had called them to be His disciples, H.

The purposes of this column are succinctly stated in the title and motto-it is for the mutual benefit, and sins to be helpful and hopeful Being for the common goed, it is for the common use-a public servant, a purveyor of in-formation and suggestion, a medium for theinerchange of ideas. In this capacity it so communications, and its success depends largely on the support given it in this respect. THE SIN OF OMISSION. It isn't the thing you do, dear. It's the thing you leave undone, Which gives you the bitter heartache, At the setting of the sun, The tender word forgotten The letter yca did not write, The flower you might have sent, dear, Are your haunting ghosts at night.

The stone you might have lifted Out of your brother's way, The bit of heartsome counsel You were hurried too much to say, The loving touch of the hand, dear, The gentle and winsome tone That you had no time or thought for

With troubles enor gh of your own These little acts of kindness, So easily out of mind, These chances to be angels. Which even mortals find They come in night and silence. Each chill repoachful wraith, When hope is faint and flagging And a blight has dropped on faith.

For life is all too short, dear, And sorrow is all too great To suffer our slow compassion That tarries until too late. And it's not the thing you do, dear, It's the thing you leave undone, Which gives you the bitter heartache At the setting of the sun. -Selected

Dear Aunt Madge

I will send this poem: perhaps it will fit in somewhere all right. How many of us leave things undone that we should do? I, for one, leave many things undone. I fear that is why you are so often left alone to fill the M. B. column. You do it so nicely and are so patient about it, but it is not fair, all the same. If every niece who can write so well would do what she could, how much better it would be or Aunt Madge

Well, I am glad that the State election turned out as it did. I am for temperance, and I think many others are, especially Dell. I have just read of the M. B. reunion. I am glad that you all had such a nice time. W.

The poem is a fine selection, and I thank you, W., for the letter also. It is a good time of year for us to heed the thought of the stanzas. Some way our reunion season is to M. B.'s what New Year's is to most everyone - a time to make good resolutions, and the poem will be a help to us to remember them.

You will be interested in the letter which follows, and A. M. Y. has kindly made it very plain and easy for each one who wishes a picture or pictures to order directly of her.

BOSTON, Sept. 12. Dear Aunt Madge and Family:

At the reunion, I was told that I should be neglecting my duty if I did not send a report, so will do so, but it will be a report regard-ing the pictures. School began the next Tues-day, Sept. 3, and I have been very busy, so have not received the related to the school of have just received the prints from photogra-pher. I am very glad to say all came out well.

I have a good picture of Dell's home, one of Aunt Maria and Carolyn which is fine, one of "S. J. Y." and "Ann", who look as though posing for a picture was one of the most serious things of life, and one of the group which is good of all except one or two who persisted in remaining in the shadow of Dell's piazza post, despite invitations to join the sunshine crowd.

I shall be very glad to send any number of vear. these to anyone who wishes them, for for cents each for the 24x34 inch, unmounted, or thirty-five cents each for the enlarged ones mounted -5x7 inches. The postage on the small ones will be two cents for any number each. The photographers are all very busy at present, but think they could do the work in two weeks after the orders are all in, so shall be glad to hear promptly from any who wish the prints.

tricks, that in my resting times I felt he amused me and was another blessing And there came in the mail a letter from a distant cousin, bright and witty. Then I thought - and even now I feel ashamed when threatened with "grummits" - this dea dear cousin has been paralyzed from the waist line down for five long years. There she sits in her invalid chair (lashed in, at that) from morning until night, and what did she write? Why, how much she had to be thankful for a good home, a kind husband, loving friends and better than all, a promise that her sufferings would all be over and that sometime and somewhere her poor maimed body would again be well and strong. I am looking forward to Sept. 25, hoping to see Aunt Maria at the Orland fair, have chance to admire the gorgeous bouquet she always brings and see little Carolyn again, as the only times I have ever seen her were at the Orland fair.

I am another who hails with delight any new recipe. Am to try the tomato mince meat this week. Haven't I seen, a long time ago. that there was an Aunt Madge cook-bool that was sold to all desiring one? Now, what I want to know is this: Can one be b ought now, and if so, where, and what is the price, and why couldn't I have asked before and not written this whole preamble? But then, I might not have been "ALL DONE" You surely deserve one of those little cook-books as a reward for coining a new word. When any of us begin to have symptoms, like yours, we will think of the "grummits" and recall your remedy. I trust you will receive the cook-book before you see this in print. Dear M. B. friends, I am sure you will enjoy the column this week, and please don't forget the suggestion of last week, in regard to making it the best ever this AUNT MADGE.

Dear Aunt Madge and All;

Wasn't the reunion of 1912 just what the small boy would call a "crackerjack of a time", and those lovely flowers, all brought by loving friends, and wasn't Dell all that a hostess could be? And then, the dinner! What could be any better than that dinner, unless it was to watch the sweet face of deal little Carolyn. Oh! no: I wasn't there, only in thought;

but then it does one good to think pleasant things, just the same as it gives one the-well I call them "grummits"-to think of all the criss-cross things that come along to upset one. if they are thought of long enough to myself as a person without any blessings. Here I was with a dirty house, the school-teacher to board, the nearest meat-market three miles away. Oh, dear! Not a thing looked cheerful. So I "grummitted". At last, in sheer weariness, I looked over the paper, not that I expected to find any-thing to interest me, but the first thing I read was of several families homeless and desti-tute. Well, I thought, a dirty house is better then no house at all because I can clean and then no house at all, because I can clean and get it done sometime, so I counted the house as a blessing, and set about preparing dinne a little more cheerfully. When, at that meal the schoolmarm told me how well she liked fried alewives and dandelion greens, I set that right down as blessing number two; and who wouldn't, with the market three miles way? And the next day every hen in the flock gave me an egg and cackled so loud I just had to laugh, and after I laughed once, I had to keep it up, as my blessings increased

REPUBLICAN NOMINEES.

NATIONAL ELECTION, NOV. 5, 1912.

FOR PRESIDENT, WILLIAM H. TAFT, OF OHIO.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT, JAMES S. SHERMAN, OF NEW YORK.

An Appeal for Unity.

No stronger appeal for harmony in the national campaign could be made than that of Gov.-elect Haines in his address in Waterville last week to the thousands who met to do him honor.

After reviewing in his own picturesque way the political situation in Maine, the causes leading up to re-publican victory in the State, he made a remarkable appeal for harmony on the great issues at stake in part his own words:

"Now, my fellow-republicans, don't forget the old saying that 'whom the Gods seek to destroy they first make mad!' Don't forget that in unity there is strength! Don't forget that the same power and force of getting together and working in the coming contest, is just as important as it has been in our State campaign, and without it we may have nothing but regrets to show for our activities. "At no time in the history of the nation has the need of the great principles of government as laid down and maintained by the publican party been so apparent in our mational administration as at the present

Sec. 19.19

"Is there any great question before the nation which any two intelligent republicans, however much they differ as to the personalities of the republican leaders, can differ upon? Do we not all agree on the great fundamental principles of the party, and can we not, in some way, be thoroughly united, in order that these principles may be given the fullest endorsement?

"This is my desire-this is my prayer-this is my injunction to you. Be moderate; be Don't be governed by anger or preju-Remember that principles are greater sane. than candidates, and that all party success depends upon unity of action. The candi-date is but the instrument to carry principles into effect.

member that all officers, both great and small, are but the agents of the people who elect them. Remember we are living under a government of law-that all laws emanate from the people; that we are governed by the great concensus of opinion, the result of con-tinuous and continual agitation, which finally becomes shaped and moulded into the written laws of the land. "Remember the injunction of Lincoln that

'a house divided against itself cannot stand'. Remember that the republican party is the party of progress. Remember that the majority in a party must shape the party's poli-cies to yield to the will of the majority. In mage-carner and the employer-to all that makes for the continued prosperity of our state, and to the uplift of our people, during the years which are to come. "There must be some ingenious minds within our State who, at the present time, will be able to devise some method by which the majority sentiment amongst republicans within our party can be given expression to in the coming national contest. It is not for me to devise the scheme, but I feel confident that such a scheme can be devised. "If the advocates of different national indidates and the followers of the two great candidates and the followers of the two great party leaders, can be given an opportunity to express their wishes in this matter, with the understanding that the sentiment of the ma-jority shall be the action of all, then the work is done. If this is not done, our demo-cratic friends will accomplish their fall pur-pose, and we shall have no more republican party in Maine, and the democratic rule will be returned to full power in our State in two ears. This is what they are looking an working for as much as for a national victory. "Just think of leaving this great and glorious jollification, over an election in which we were thoroughly united, and through which we resisted all efforts of the democrats to break our ranks-and entering to-morrow into the struggle for the next two months to scratch out our own political eyes! What stupidity this would be! Worthy only of the e of a political crime.

It is not possible that you who are carrying these banners and torches, and that who stand with you throughout the length and breadth of this State will allow such a crime to be committed!

"I can only add to the first words which were uttered by our great chairman in that great first political speech of the campaign. at the opening of the Bangor convention, the key-note of which was: 'Get together,' that having got together in State affairs, we keep together in all things in our political undertakings."

The managers of the republican campaign, both at the headquarters in New York and in Chicago, have been requested by President Taft to instruct the republican spellbinders to emphasize the prosperity of the country in all addresses to be made from now on. It is considered that the opponents of the President are dodging the tariff issue so effectively that the voters understand their weakness on this plank. On the other hand, no candidate can point to such the national campaign. We give in a record of prosperity as can the present President of the United

There will be a special town meeting in Bar Harbor next Monday to act on several road improvement propositions, among which is one to build a macadam road to the top of Green mountain.

FREDERICK HALE FOR TAFT. For Roosevelt Before Convention-Does Not Believe in a Third Party.

Col. Frederick Hale, of Portland, the Maine member of the republican national mmittee, will support President Taft in the presidential campaign. This attitude is in conformity with a statement which he made early in July, after the republican national convention in Chicago, and soon after his election to membership on the committee, in place of F. Marion Simpson, who served a few months, following the death of ex-Goy, Hill.

Col. Hale's activity in politics for the past dozen years, his loyalty to his political associates and his endeavor to derive party success are qualities well known to those who have been similarly interested.

Subsequent to the spring campaign, when he was largely responsible in the contest which resulted in a Roosevelt delegation going to Chicago, there had been much curiosity as to his course in the Nation wide fight which has just begun.

In response to a request for his views on the present political situation, he said:

"I have asked Judge Philbrook, chairman of the State committee, to call a meeting of that committee to see what can be done in this State in this campaign. This meeting will be held within a short time. To my mind the only way that the fight can be conducted by the national committee is through the State organization, down through the county, city and town organizations. This meeting is to be held to devise some plan, this or some other, for the work.

"My own position I stated clearly on my re-turn from Chicago where I attended the national convention, that I did not believe in a third party and that I should support the republican ticket. I have seen no reason since then to change my mind. I am sorry to see the republican party split up, but I be-lieve that the people of this State, republicans and progressives, will see that the com-mon enemy is the democratic party and that eventually they will get together again.

"I consider myself as progressive as the members of the new party. I believed in the spring when I supported Col. Roosevelt for the republican nomination for President that the republican party needed to be more progressive, and I believe so still, but I differ with many in that I believe that this change can best be wrought through the republican party itself. "In the September fight the united republican party in this State showed what it could do. I did everything I could for the success of the State ticket. In company with Chair man Philbrook, of the State committee, I wen to New York and had a conference Chairman Hilles, of the national committee As a result we were given substantial assist-ance for the State campaign. My personal this I gave to the city committee of Portland. "My original idea was to give this to the State committee, but, with the consent of the State chairman, I contributed directly to the city committee of Portland which was urgently in need of money at the time. I spe of this as I wish to explain why my name not appear in the list of contributors to the State committee. I have been in frequen conference, with Chairman Hilles, of the national committee, and Chairman Phil-brook, of the State committee throughout the campaign."

Governor Wilson informs the copie that he believes that under a low tariff we will double or treble our prosperity. Can he point out a low tariff pewhich we did double or treble prosperity? Did the blessed low tariffs continue long, or did the country return to protection? If he claims that the Walker tariff lasted ten years, will be be honest enough to point out the counteracting influences that neutralized some of its evils?

The governor need not quote a republican speech or look at a republican paper. If he will read up the crash under Van Buren, as described by so good a democrat as Shepard in his "Life of Van Buren", if he will quote James Buchanan's account of the hard times under the low tariff of Hon. J. Lucius Higgins, now a lawyer in 1857, he will find an excellent case for the republicans.

Now comes the news that It seems that Eugene Hale is not the only the republicans of Maine intend to fight Hale in Maine who can "sling English" beautifully and expressively. CAUGHT A TARTAR

By ARNOLD DUNCAN

A man in a popper and sait suit and a felt hat got on a train at a way station, settled himself comfortably in his seat, took a morning paper from his pocket and began to read. When the conductor came around for his ticket he thrust his hand into his pocket for his wallet and looked very much chagrined. Then he went through his other pockets, and, not finding it, he said:

"Conductor, just before leaving my hotel this morning I changed my suit, putting the one I had been wearing with my money in the coat pocket in my trunk. What's worse, my trunk did not reach me at the station and is to come by a later train. If you'll let me go through to B., when we got into the station I'll telephone for a friend to bring me my fare and will give it to you

"Ticket," was the conductor's laconic

"I have said all I have to say," continued the passenger. "I have no money to pay now, but I'll have plenty at the end of the route." "You'll have to pay your fare or get off." "Not here, I trust, in this swampy country. You will at least carry me to the next station."

"Not unless you pay your fare from the one where you got on." "Are your orders such as warrant you in such inhuman action?"

"Our orders are to put those who re-fuse to pay fares off the train." "Well," said the passenger ruefully, my money behind and have nothing to pay with." The conductor pulled the bell, and the train stopped. The passenger made no resistance, but walked to the platform and got off into a swamp. The train went on, leaving him standing on the track looking after it. Then, first looking up and down the line of the road, he started on foot to pursue his journey.

A few days later the passenger who couldn't pay his fare went into the offices of the road and asked to see the general superintendent. He waited fore returning home. half an hour, then was ushered into the room of a sleek looking man who asked him what he could do for him. After dinner, an entertainment of music He told the story of being put off the train and said he had come to effect a settlement for damages or he would sue for them. The superintendent said treasurer, Alden Haslem; committee of that if he would call in at room No. 7 he would find the official who adjusted and Willard Haslem; committee on enall claims. The passenger went in tertainment, Isabel, Bessie and Grace there, had a talk with the claim officer. Jordan. who got out of him all the information he desired, asked him what he would settle for, got him to put it in writing. took his address and said he would write him about the matter.

The passenger never heard from him. Not long after this it was evident that there was manipulation in the stock of the road. No one, not even the president, could find out who was at the bottom of it. The price of the securities would go up a bit, then gradually sag, then rise again. But the general tendency was upward. The affairs of the road were known only to a few, who could see no reason for an advance. Indeed, business was falling off dreadfully. Two feeders, one at either terminal, were diverting their business to other roads. Then the price of the stock began to go down like lead. Finally it reached a point where the fluctuation ceased.

JOHN DELAITTRE DEAD.

Son of Ellsworth and Former Mayor of Minneapolis. Hon. John DeLaittre, one of Ellsworth's

most distinguished sons, died last Thursday at Minneapolis, the home of his adop tion, aged eighty years. Death was due to old age. He was ill but a short time, being at his office the Monday preceding his death

John DeLaittre was born in Ellsworth March 5, 1832, a descendant of the early French Huguenot settlers on Frenchman's bay. With the opening of the gold fields in California, he felt the call to the golden West, and in 1852 went to California. There he engaged in the lumbering and mining business.

In 1865 he moved to Minneapolis, where he first engaged in flour manufacturing and wool business. Five years later he entered the lumber manufacturing business, the firm name being Eastman, Bovey, DeLaittre Lumber Co., later incorporated as the Bovey-DeLaittre Lumber Co., of which he was president at the time of his death. He also held other large business interests and became prominent in civic affairs of Minneapolis. He was elected mayor in He had also been a member of the new capitol commission, the Minneapolis civic commission, was state prison inspector seven years. He was president of the Farmers & Mechanics savings bank, and a former president of the Nicollet national bank.

Mr. DeLaittre married Miss Clara T Eastman in Conway, N. H., in 1865. Mrs. DeLaittre survives him, with one son. Karl, at present on the Minneapolis board f aldermen, and a daughter, Corinne. Mr. DeLaittre retained an old-home love for Maine and particularly for Ellsworth The latter was manifested in very material form a few years ago, when he gave to the city a $3,000 stock certificate in the Tri-State Telephone & Telegraph Co., the interest on which, $180 annually, forms the Defaittre library fund, from which valuable addition to the city library is made each year.

OBITUARY. G. LAWRENCE GOODWIN.

G. Lawrence Goodwin, a native of Surry and for many years in the barber business in Bar Harbor, died last Wednesday at the home of his brother, Stephen Goodwin, in Surry.

Mr. Goodwin learned his trade as a barber in Bangor, and later opened a shop in Ellsworth in partnership with the late Alex. Parody. They continued in business here for twelve years, opening a branch shop in Bar Harbor.

Mr. Goodwin afterward conducted the business alone, selling out his Ellsworth shop and giving all his time to Bar Harbor. He had also conducted winter shope in Florida, and for one year was barber on a Mediterranean excursion steamer.

Daring his years as barber he had in his chair some of the most famous men of the country, including three presidents - Arthur, Harrison and Cleveland - General McLellan, Admirals Sampson and Schley, James G. Blaine, and many lesser lights.

Fatter Blueberries.

While the New England blueberry is justly famous, its systematic cultivation until recently has been neglected, largely through the belief that it was impossible.

The large bushes in the grounds of the Smithsonian institution at Washington are probably more than fifty years old, and many such bushes in the Arnold Arboretum near Boston demonstrate the fallacy of the idea that the blueberry cannot be transplanted and cultivated.

Some years ago Dr. Frederick D. Covelle, government botanist, started upon a series of investigations of the culture of the berries, which, according to the Scientific American, has continued to the present time with somewhat remarkable esults.

Proceeding with the idea that previous failures along the same line had been due to a misunderstanding of the soil requirements of the blueberry, which are radically different from those of our common cultivated plants, the doctor, whose interest in the subject was attracted as far back as 1906, has made a careful study of the soil requirements with important results.

The doctor found it necessary to devise a gauge. This huckleberryometer, or blueberry gauge, as it is more prosaically known in the department, is used for measuring the berries and in noting the progress of the cultivation. The possibility of culture has not only been demonstrated but the size development as well. Starting with a normal size of the opening No. 11 of the gauge, the berries have been developed to size No. 15, and doubtless further cultivation will result in a much larger size, the flavor and fruitiness of the berry being improved rather than impaired by the cultivation.

Nevertheless the diversion ceased and trade began to flow again over the line where it had flowed originally. The president was puzzled. He sent for some of the principal stockholders and asked them if they knew anything about the matter. They didn't, but admitted that during the recent flurry in the stock they had sold most of their holdings.

One morning the president took up a newspaper and read in the financia columns that a new railroad magnate had appeared. John Talcott, a- man who had achieved some success at re organizing roads in the west, had comeast and with associates had bought a controlling interest in two lines, and it was suspected that he had picked up in open market a majority of the stock of a connecting link between the two That connecting link the president knew to be his own line.

Ellsworth, Sept. 12, 1912.

"This here gent approaching, him who is to be line rider on the Flying V along with the rest of us, is the champion dispenser of bad luck. When ever he goes he brings calamity with

"I've heard about him, then, Ain't his name Joe Bliss?" asked Pete Willis.

"Yes. They call him 'Calamity Joe' because of the sure woe that camps on his trail perpetual," answered Morgan. They sat about the door of the mess and watched the shambling house forms of horse and rider approach them.

Presently the horse scuffled to a standstill, and Mr. Joe Bliss threw a long leg over the saddle and stepped to the ground.

"Howdy, gents?" he said, looking gloomily down at them.

"Howdy, Joe?" said Morgan sadly. "Let me interjooce my feller sufferers!" and he gravely mentioned the names of his companions, who all exchanged nods and muttered "howdys' with the newcomer.

"What happened over to Flamm's?" asked Morgan as Bliss sat down and rolled a cigarette.

"Measles," replied Bliss stoically. "I never had 'em in my life, but old Flamm seemed to be afraid I'd catch em, so he fired me. I'd only been there a week.'

The next morning they rode forth together. Joe Bliss ahead and the five following in a broken line. "Seems to enjoy his bad reputashun."

remarked Morgan to Freeman. "Quite some! I been looking for measle spots all the morning," returned Freeman. "It won't be measles this time. He changes his calamity every time he changes a job. We'll get something else as sure as eggs is eggs," muttered Morgan.

"If he plants any calamity on this here outfit he'll sure get his," declared Freeman violently, and some how Joe Bliss heard the words.

"I got ter do something to get rid of that reputation," he admitted to himself and thereupon thought long upon the matter.

And it bore startling results. It took some time to accomplish, but the nature of Calamity Joe's vindication of his ill name will go down in the history of Poorgrass county.

Several weeks passed without anything unfortunate occurring to bear up the evil reputation of the new man. Then one day Joe Bliss received leave of absence and was gone all the morning. At noon as his fellow riders were eating lunch on the fringe of the scattered herd of cattle Joe rode hastily up to Morgan.

"Gents," he said excitedly, "there's some ladies in distress yonder in Salt canyon. Picnic ladies they are, and some yaller minded individual has stampeded their horses. What's them delicate females goin' to do?"

and once within its confines a pleasing sight rewarded their coming. Around a campile were seated half a dozen girls. Most of them were pretty, and all were attractive. The queenly brunette and the "peachy' blond and the red haired damsel all were there, as well as three others. All of them sprang up from the picnic feast around which they were gathered and viewed with alarm the approach of the cattlemen.

the narrow entrance to Salt canyon,

Morgan was in advance, and, whipping off his hat with a graceful sweep, he addressed the red haired divinity. "Excuse me, miss, but we are the rescue party," he said pleasantly.

"What you going to rescae?" de manded the red haired one imperiously, while the others drew close together and giggled.

"We was informed that some yallow hearted varmint had stampeded your horses." said Morgan calmly.

"Yes," said the imperious one stiffly. "It's all true, but we don't need any rescuing. We're going to get home all right.

"How ?" "Walk," she returned calmly. "Any objection?

"Yes, ma'am," said Morgan emphat-"We don't let ladies walk twencally. ty miles when they're out for a holiday time-not in Poregrass county "I'm sure they're very kind, Mabel," spoke up one of the other girls. "You know, we were saying just be fore they came that we didn't know how we were going to get home." added the queenly brunette, with a flashing smile at Freeman.

"I suppose it is well meant, and we are obliged." said the spokeswoman suddenly. "Perhaps you gentlemen can tell us how to get our horses back. They belong to Dan Perry, the liveryman at Eagle City."

In response to these amenities on the part of the red haired damsel the five rescuers slipped from their horses and awkwardly submitted to Morgan's elaborate ceremony of introduction to six ladies whose names were unknown to any of the cattlemen.

In their guise of members of a res cue party they were invited to partake of the lunch and having done so entered into serious consultation as the best methods of discovering the miscreant who had run off the horses or stampeded them and also the all important question of how Finklestein's salesladies were to be returned to Eagle City that evening.

At last the unfortunate picnickers consented gracefully to submit to the better judgment of the men, and it was agreed that each lady should ride one of the Flying V horses and that its owner should walk beside the horse so as to ride it back when their deed of chivalry should have been accomplished.

Of course all this required much discussion in general and then in tete-atetes, where names were exchanged and there was much merry badinage as past purchases of "gents furnishings" at Finklestein's emporium were recalled.

It was Smith who scouted around and found one of the missing ponies grazing out on the plain. He quickly mounted his own horse and caught the animal, and in this way there was provided a mount for the sixth lady. who was suffering from the toothache and cared little whether she was furnished with an attendant cavaller or

It was she who hurried them home ward at sunset, when her companions had decided to ride back to Eagle City in the moonlight.

They formed a procession as they set forth on the twenty mile journey to Eagle City. The toothache lady the way, and the others straggled after with a man at every horse's bridle. This was, of course, necessary, because never had there been collected together such a number of vicious, ill tempered Wilkins was bored.

Throwing down a newspaper on the table of the reading room of his club, he arose from his chair, strolled out to the cigar stand, lit a cigarette, smoked for a few minutes, threw away the stump, walked to the club entrance and stood with his hands in his pockets, wondering what next he should do to kill time. "Cab!"

A vehicle was wheeled from the line of cabs standing before the club to the curb opposite him, and he entered it, telling the jehu to drive him to the theater, where he intended to buy tickets for that evening's performance On the seat beside him lay a lady's hand bag. Wilkins took it up, looked at it, opened it and examined the conwith a view to discovering to whom it belonged. He found them as diversified as those in a boy's pocket. but there was only one article that gave him any hope of identifying the owner of the property, a brown paper parcel five or six inches long, two inches broad and an inch thick. Finding no address or other mark on it, he concluded it to be a shopping purchase and put it back in the bag. But, desiring to exhaust every means of finding a clew to the ownership, he took it out again and unrolled it. He found bills to the amount of $20,000.

Not that he felt elated at making an accession to his fortune, for he had no idea of keeping his find, but that it was evident the money had been left inadvertently in the carriage by a woman and there would be something for him to do to trace her and return the money.

Moreover there was a daintiness about the bag and its contents that caused him to fancy the owner was young. Then, again, a middle aged woman would not likely be so careless as to leave a small fortune in a cab, and an old one would be no more like ly to be riding about with so much in her possession. At any rate, Wilkins would have it that the lady was young, and, having gone thus far, he fancied she must be attractive. She had doubtless been the last person to occupy the cab before him, and the driver could tell him about her. Wilkins put the bag and contents under his coat and when he left the cab asked the driver for information concerning his last fare.

Wilkins was informed that she was a young lady who had been taken in before a dry goods store and had been driven to a bank. She had come out of the bank and re-entered the carriage, ordering him to drive to another store, where she alighted, seeming to be ill. She had staggered into the store and disappeared. He had waited some time for her, but as she didn't reappear he gave up waiting for her and drove away. On thinking the matter over Wilkins did not believe there would be much hunting involved in the case. The loss would be advertised, and all he needed to do was to watch the personal columns in the newspapers. This he did for a week, but not seeing the notice he expected he concluded that lady had taken means to recover her loss or had been ill or possibly might have died. He inquired at police headquarters if any such loss had been reported, but gained no clew in this way. He did not care to make known his find, for he knew that if he did there would be many claimants, and it would be difficult to head off some of the more ingenius ones. The matter dragged along till Wilkins began to be troubled at holding so large an amount of some other person's money. Then one day he fided the matter to his friend Brodwell. Brodwall said that he had seen an advertisement of a large amount of money having been left in a cab, but just when he had seen the notice he couldn't remember, nor could he recollect the newspaper in which it had appeared. Wilkins made a search through the newspapers issued since he had found the money, but they were so volumi-nous that he failed to find what he looked for. This was discouraging. He began to fear that his keeping th money would get him into trouble. Probably the matter had been put into the hands of detectives who might be on his track. He was inclined to turn the matter over to the police, but feared his reasons for keeping it secret would not be accepted. At any rate, he might suffer in the opinion of the public, who would know all about the affair. Being an imaginative man, he permitted himself to brood over the situ ation. Instead of a romance he had caught a tartar. He began to wish the money was in the bottom of the sea. Indeed, he thought of putting it there. The bills were a burden to him He didn't like to put them in the bank. for the deposit of such a sum might excite a suspicion that would lead to the fact getting out that he had a large sum in his possession which did not belong to him. That discovery might lead to very unpleasant consequences. He kept the money in his safe deposit

But even in so secret a place he did not feel easy. He was haunted by all sorts of fears. Supposing he should loose the key to her box and were arrested for keeping money that did not belong to him. In that case be would not be able to make restitution.

One day on taking a cab at his club he noticed that his driver was the man in whose vehicle he had made the find, Wilkins hastened to ask him if he had heard of or seen the young lady who had gone into a store and had not returned. He said that he had. She had caused inquiries to be made for him and finally found him. She had fainted in the store and remained unconscious for some time. He had been closely questioned by a man in her interest and was quite sure he had been shadowed by a detective. Asked whom he had driven next after the young lady, he could not remembe

Wilkins was all in a flutter at this information. He realized that he must take some action in the matter, but feared anything he might do would redound to his injury. When a man is rattled he usually goes wrong. Wil-kins asked the cabman to give him the young lady's address, and when the man said he hadn't it Wilkins told him not to say anything about him in the matter for the present and handed him a ten dollar bill.

Wilkins as soon as he had taken this step saw that he had put himself in the position of having bribed the coachman to conceal his identity. He could not sleep at nights for thinking of what a frightful thing it would be should he be pounced upon by a detective and forced to confess that he had been keeping a large sum of money that did not belong to him. It was evident the loser of the money believ ed that it had fallen into the hands of some one who was intending to keep it and was taking measures to find that person

All this was more than Wilkins had bargained for. He grew thin and haggard and began to fear that his appearance alone would incriminate him What he desired was to know the address of the young lady that he might return the money anonymously, or if could discover that she was of a kindly, sympathetic disposition he might go to her, confess that he had her money and beg her to believe his story and not expose him to an unmerciful world. One day the coachman involved in the matter called for him at the club and said he had something to communicate. Wilkins went out with him to the sidewalk, where no one would hear what was said, and the cabman began: "I've seen the young leddy again. sir, and she says the day I drove her drew a large sum from the bank. and, bein' sick, when she got out of my cab left the money inside. She says the next fare I got must 'a' found it and is keepin' what don't belong to him. She's offered me $1,000 reward if I'll get her money for her."

Here was an additional complication If Wilkins returned the money, ignor ing the cabman, the fellow might make It hot for him. Wilkins by this time was in a condition of mind to see a term in the penitentiary staring him in the face. Instead of pulling himself together, returning the money openly and trusting to his ability to come out of the affair unscathed, he asked the man for the lady's address, promising to see that he got something by way of reward. But the cabman by this time had come to believe there was a good deal in it and declined to give the address unless Wilkins would pay him out of the funds the reward the young lady had offered. When Wilkins de murred at this, the fellow threatened to report him as the man who was holding the money. So Wilkins took the address, gave the ag containing the bills just

"Huh! You don't even know her name!" snorted Morgan contemptuous-"I guess I'll move along over there myself. I bought a shirt in Finkle stein's last week, and I want to ask the red haired lady I got it from if it's a fast color." His handsome fac-

The five other men consulted together, and finally all rode off in the direction of Salt canyon. Meantime Joe, the harbinger of calamity, stuck to his job and manfully did the work of siv herders that sunshiny day.

"That combination ought to break up that there evil reputashun I've got," he grinned as he rode back and forth. The five men rode single file through brutes as the horses that belonged to Messrs. Morgan, Freeman, Smith, Jepson and Pete Willis, and the fair riders appeared timid.

At dawn the five weary cattlemen rode slowly into the camp. Calamity Joe was on watch and without a word handed cups of hot coffee to his friends. "You gents are some heroes," he ventured, breaking into their reveries of tender looks exchanged and engage. ments promised for Wednesday even ing to come, for the Flying V men were bachelors all.

"I reckon so," said Freeman absently. He was wondering if he could earn enough to support a certain blond beauty in case she would marry him. Morgan suddenly looked up and caught Calamity Joe's attention with a sharp glance.

"Who do you reckon run off them hosses?" he asked.

"I dunno!" declared Joe.

"You was seen doing it and might as well own up," shrewdly said Morgan.

Then Calamity Joe confessed his du plicity. He told how he had waited his opportunity and, hearing about the proposed picnic of Finklestein's clerks, had himself stampeded their horses and thus created a situation whereby his comrades could rescue the fair dam sels and at the same time make their acquaintance.

In the guise of a matchmaker Calamity Joe had hoped to hide his unfortunate reputation.

And he did, for ever after they called him "Cupid," and he was obliged to officiate as best man at so many weddings that he almost regretted the step he had taken.

After all, the foreman of the Fly ing V declared that Joe had brought calamity in his wake, for five of his best men married within a year and started ranches of their own.

found them; called on the young lady. ago.

Handing them to her, he waited till her delight had somewhat subsided, then gave her a graphic account of his finding the bag, his waiting to see her advertisement, his missing it when it appeared and, lastly, his having been drawn into the position of retaining funds that did not belong to him.

"I weighed," he said dolefully in conclusion, "when I found your bag 170 pounds. Look at me now. I can bare ly pull down 140."

"You poor man!" exclaimed the girl, repressing a smile.

Wilkins said nothing about the thousand dollars hush money he had paid the cabman. That was his own secret and he did not propose to divulge. "Of course," said the girl. "you are entitled to a reward, and I beg of you after all the trouble and worry you have had in the matter to accept at least the amount I offered the cabman. I assure you I would feel so much more comfortable at your receiving some thing."

A gentleman, a member of a swell club, to receive a reward for returning money found! Not he.

"Since the cabman." she went on, "has been instrumental in the return of my property I shall pay him the re ward I offered him."

Wilkins, seeing that he must tell the rest of the story or the cabman would receive double pay, made a confidante of his hostess and a clean breast.

There was something so delightfully human in this end to the matter that was touched beyond measure. She could not induce Wilkins to permit her to reimburse him, but in time he discovered that she had given him her heart, and it was not long before her hand and her fortune went with it. "You never can tell." says Wilkins, "when you're getting a bargain. The thousand dollars I paid that cabman brought me two treasures-the one a wife, the other her estate."
