The opening of Miss Emilie Young's course of dancing assemblies, first announced for last week and postponed until Tuesday of this week, has been postponed for still another week because of the continued illness of Miss Young.

Claire Clement is the proudest young hunter in Ellsworth to-day, and with good reason. Though he has hunted considerably, it was not until this week that he was able to cut a big-game notch in the stock of his rifle. And the notch is a big one, for the game it represents is a 900-pound bull moose shot in the vicinity of H. C. Fletcher's in No. 8. The head is a handsome one.

It's a rash bull moose that prowls around Congressman John A. Peters' preserves. Now this is not a political item, but a hunting story. Monday morning J. S. Guptill, who, with his father, is living at Howard B. Moor's lumber camp at the Back meadow, opened the door of the camp, and there stood a bull moose in the Peters field. He shot the moose from the door of the camp.

The shoe factory proposition in Saco is coming on in good shape. C. O. Normandy, formerly of Norridgewock, has been elected president. The capital is fixed at $50,000, but the amount to be raised for the present will be limited to $10,000. Subscriptions have come in well, and the people who have taken shares at $10 each are satisfied that the business will be profitable. The stock subscribed for is preferred 7 per cent. stock. The building is rapidly approaching completion, and Mr. Normandy is to make arrangements for machinery in a short time.—Portland Press.

Mayor Cunningham has received a letter from the State highway commission, calling attention to the law passed by the last legislature, prohibiting advertising signs within the limits of any highway, within 500 feet of crossings of highways or where one highway enters another. Signs so erected must be removed at the expense of the person or persons erecting or maintaining them, who are subject to a fine of $50 for violation. The State highway commission is calling upon the municipal authorities to enforce the law. If they fail to do so, they are liable to have their State money withheld.

A postoffice inspector who visited Ellsworth recently put his foot down on the lax method of collecting postoffice box rents, long in vogue here. Hereafter, boxes for which rent is not paid within ten days from first notice, will be closed, and a notice will inform the holder of the box that "this box is closed; rent not paid". Of course, it doesn't please a man to find this notice staring him in the face, especially when the corridor is full of people waiting for their mail, and Postmaster Nealley has had to stand the brunt of the hard knocks. But those are orders, and if you don't like it, knock "Uncle Sam", not Postmaster Nealley.

Llewellyn C. Haynes, formerly of Ellsworth, died Monday at the Bar Harbor hospital, where he was receiving treatment. Death resulted from Bright's disease. Mr. Haynes was in the fifty-eighth year of his age. He was the son of the late Alfred and Abigail Townsend Haynes, of Ellsworth. For the past fifteen years he had been employed in Bar Harbor. He is survived by a widow, one son—Aldis, who is in the insurance business at Worcester, Mass., and a daughter—Abbie, of Bangor; also one brother—Winfield, of Saco. The funeral was held at the chapel in Lakewood this afternoon, Rev. P. A. A. Killam officiating. Interment was at Lakewood.

Mrs. George E. Fifield died Sunday afternoon at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Charles S. Grows, in Bath. Mrs. Fifield had been in poor health for a long time, suffering from a heart trouble. She left Ellsworth about two weeks ago for Bath, to spend the winter with her daughter. Soon after arriving there her condition became alarming, and Monday of last week Mr. Fifield was summoned. Her son, W. T. Fifield, of Danforth, was also with her, thus her whole family being with her at the end. Mr. and Mrs. Fifield came to Ellsworth from Danforth about

NARROW ESCAPE.

Lakewood Boy Badly Injured by Accidental Discharge of Rifle.

Earl, the ten-year-old son of Ralph Sargent, of Lakewood, was badly wounded by the accidental discharge of his rifle yesterday forenoon.

The boy rested the rifle on a rock and was leaning upon it, when the butt slipped and the rifle was discharged. The bullet, of 32-calibre, struck the point of one of the short ribs just above the stomach, and glanced upward and outward, just over the heart, came out below the left shoulder. A fraction of an inch difference in the point or the angle at which the bullet struck the first rib, and death would have almost certainly resulted.

The boy was able to run to his home, a quarter of a mile away. Drs. Woodruff and Knowlton attended him. It is a bad flesh wound, but unless complications ensue, no serious results are feared.

SUNDAY SCHOOL

Lesson VIII.—Fourth Quarter, For Nov. 23, 1913.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Josh. 1, 1-9—Memory Verses, 5, 6—Golden Text, Josh. 1-9—Commentary by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

The book of Joshua opens with another reference to the passing from earth of Moses, in some respects greatest of all prophets (Deut. xxxiv, 10-12), and again he is called by that great name, the servant of the Lord (Deut. xxxiv, 5). It is one of the titles of the Lord Jesus (Isa. xlii, 1; Matt. xlii, 18; Zech. iii, 8), and on that great passover night, when there was a strife among the disciples as to who should be the greatest, He taught that it was greater to serve and said, "I am among you as he that serveth" (Luke xxii, 24-27). Paul rejoiced in the title (Rom. i, 1; Phil. i, 1; Tit. i, 1) and perhaps never said anything greater than when he said, "Whom I am and whom I serve" (Acts xxvii, 23). Joshua is called Moses' minister or servant or the one standing before him (Ex. xxiv, 13; xxxiii, 11; Deut. i, 38).

We meet him for the first time victoriously leading Israel against Amalek, while Aaron and Hur stayed by the hands of Moses. Next we find him as Moses' minister going up into the mount of God with Moses when he went to receive the tables of the law and returning with him after the forty days. Then we find him abiding in the tabernacle and afterward as one of the twelve spies and one of the two who encouraged the people to go up at that time and possess the land, the only two who left Egypt as men and entered into the promised land (Ex. xvii, 8-16; xxiv, 13; xxxiii, 17; xxxiii, 11; Num. xiii, 8, 16; xiv, 6, 30; xxvi, 65).

When Moses was told that he could not enter into the land he asked the Lord to set a man over them who would faithfully shepherd them, and the Lord said, "Take thee Joshua, the son of Nun, a man in whom is the spirit, and lay thine hand upon him" (Num. xxvii, 12-23).

Now Moses is gone, and Joshua is the leader, and the Lord spake unto Joshua, and our lesson gives us the message. We read in one place that "the word of the Lord came expressly unto Ezekiel" (Ezek. i, 3), and unless the word of the Lord comes expressly to each of us as we read we have not read with profit as we might have done.

There is a Canaan to be possessed and enjoyed, not after we die, but here and now, and we may enter ourselves and help others to enter. It is all a matter of faith, and "we who have believed do enter into rest" (Heb. iv, 3). The land was given to them, but they were to enter in and take possession, only that which they actually trod upon being really theirs (verses 2, 4; Deut. xi, 24).

I do not know any greater assurance for a believer in the word of God than those wonderful words of the Lord to me, "I am with you." Even to Jacob He said, "Behold, I am with thee and will keep thee." To Isaac He said, "Fear not, for I am with thee." To Moses He said, "Certainly I will be with thee," and now He says to Joshua: "As I was with Moses, so I will be with thee. I will not fail thee nor forsake thee" (verse 5; Gen. xxviii, 15; xxvi, 24; Ex. iii, 12).

The Lord Jesus could say nothing greater to His disciples when He sent them forth after His resurrection with the good news for all the world than "Lo, I am with you all the days" (Matt. xxviii, 20). Just one suggestion from this great assurance certainly is this—that He will do it all, all that is to be done, if we will only be His willing and obedient fellow workers (I Cor. iii, 9; II Cor. vi, 1).

His word is to be our continual and only guide, our meditation day and night, our sole reliance in every matter, and at all times, then, there shall be true prosperity and good success and constant victory over all enemies (verses 5, 7, 8; Ps. i, 2; Jer. xvii, 7, 8). In such an attitude of soul and with a mind thus stayed upon Jehovah we cannot but be strong and of good courage. I have found this command ten times, but possibly you may find it more often—Moses to Israel, once; Moses to Joshua, twice; the Lord to Joshua, three times; Israel to Joshua, once; Joshua to Israel, once; David to Solomon, twice; (Deut. xxxi, 6, 7, 23; Josh. i, 6, 7, 9, 18; x, 24; I Chron. xxii, 13; xxviii, 20).

I remember well what a strength Deut. xxxi, 6, 8, were to me in the fall of 1876 as I moved my family from St. John, N. B., to Boston, Mass., having given up the position of principal of a public school to give my whole time to missionary work. The Lord did certainly speak to my soul in those words at that time and many a time since.

Mutual Benefit Column. EDITED BY "AUNT MADGE".

Its Motto: "Helpful and Helpful." The purposes of this column are succinctly stated in the title and motto—it is for the mutual benefit, and aims to be helpful and helpful. Being for the common good, it is for the common use—a public want, a yearning for information and suggestion, a medium for the interchange of ideas. It is its object to solicit communications, and its success depends largely on the support given it in this respect. Communications must be signed, but the name of writer will not be printed except by permission. Communications will be subject to approval or rejection by the editor of the column, but none will be rejected without good reason. Address all communications to THE AMERICAN, Ellsworth, Me.

HE WHISTLED HIS WAY TO MY HEART. They said he was bad. 'Twas enough To interest me in the boy; They called him rascally and rough, While the aged he liked to annoy. One day, as he whistled with vim, While he stood from the others apart, I was watching and studying him, When he whistled his way to my heart.

Then I noted the lad for a spell, And I found to my comfort and joy, While in mischief he oft might excel, 'Twas the mischief alone of a boy. He was bad in the sight but of those Who think boys with their boyhood should part; But in my good opinion he rose, As he whistled his way to my heart.

Let us not, who have aged with the years, Be too hasty the boys to condemn, Give them sighs of regret, or shed tears. When we see some small mischief in them, Seeking but for the good, not the bad, You become of your boy's life a part; He will take from you much that is sad, While he whistles his way to your heart.

Dear M. B. Friends: There is no reason why the young folks should not have a place in our column now and then. If, as the poet has expressed it, we all are "children of a larger growth," our hearts should never get so hardened as to have no sympathy for those bright young natures who like kittens and lambs and colts, are full of animal life. I think the above poem came from B. E. S. long years ago, and also the one which will have a place later.

The "whistling boy" will recall to some of you, as it does to me, the very sound of the music of some neighbor's boy as he passed the house with his cheery whistle. He never knew that that whistle was company to us, and though he may be on the other side of the continent from us today, there is a pleasant memory associated with him—just "music in the air" which we heard "oft in the still night."

A visitor addressing a boys' school asked, "What are boys good for?" and one little fellow answered, "Good to make men of." That answer is what is too often forgotten. The fathers who consider that fatherhood first of all places them in a position where they can show their authority, and often rule without reason, are missing much they might enjoy, if they treated their boys more as companions.

The world is new to them, and many of the ways of the world are not safe for them to travel, but the strongest help toward keeping them in the right course are the fathers in whom they have confidence because they have found them good comrades, who understood their boyish ways and experiences.

A father going from the house to the barn one snowy morning found his little boy was following him, and called back to the child, "Isn't the snow too deep for you to come?" And the answer was: "I'm all right, daddy; I'm stepping in your tracks." I wonder if the fathers, generally, are making the tracks in life they want their boys to follow.

One writer says of the development of children: And yet we check and chide The airy angels as they float about us, With rules of so-called wisdom, till they grow The same tame slaves to custom and the word.

A PLACE FOR YOU. There's a niche for you in the world, my boy, A corner for you to fill; And it waits to-day, Along life's way. For the boy with a frank "I will!" So, lad, be true. The world wants you. In the corner that you will fill—

There's a niche for you in the world, my girl, A corner for you to fill; For a girl that is kind, With a pure, sweet mind, A place that is waiting still. So, lass, be true. The world wants you. In the corner that you may fill.

The world has places for you, dears, Has corners for you to fill, And a work to do Which no one but you In God's great plan can fill. So, dears, be true, The world wants you, And your places are waiting still.

I take it as a harbinger of good that the following came to me as a ray of light and encouragement literally and directly from "Providence": Sunshine is delicious, rain is refreshing, wind braces up, snow is exhilarating; there is no such thing as bad weather, only different kinds of good weather. —John Ruskin. A quotation in the Nov. 5 AMERICAN suggested this one. C. L. F.

Advertisements. CRAMPS, HEADACHE, BACKACHE, Yield to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa.—"I was always tired and weak and my housework was a drag. I was irregular, had cramps so bad that I would have to lie down, also a distressed feeling in lower part of back, and headache. My abdomen was sore and I know I had organic inflammation.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier have helped me wonderfully. I don't have those pains any more and I am all right now." There are a great many women here who take your remedies and I have told others what they have done for me."—MRS. CHAS. MCKINNON, 1013 N. 5th St. W., Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Women who are suffering from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not lose sight of these facts or doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health. There are probably hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions of women in the United States who have been benefited by this famous old remedy, which was produced from roots and herbs over 30 years ago by a woman to relieve woman's suffering. If you are sick and need such a medicine, why don't you try it!

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

The American Magazine has some very interesting articles on Panama—"The Glory of Panama." Perhaps many of the readers of our column have kept posted, and realize something of the stupendous work that has been going on there. In these days of wonderful achievements, we lose sight of the actual greatness of some of the tasks performed, and sometime in the future the man who has been at the head of this great enterprise, Goethals, will be duly accredited with the honor he deserves for his honest, faithful, efficient work in Panama.

The spirit shown by all connected cannot fail to be an influence for good. Ray Stannard Baker says: Efficiency is the watchword. The canal is being built to last for a thousand years. There is no scamping upon the job anywhere. I don't know how many times the engineers and foremen showed me with pride, examples of the sound and workman-like way in which some particular feature of the canal was being constructed; and this in itself has been a spur to all workmen, for no man in his heart likes a poor, cheap job.

There are four deductions I want to give you which are drawn up in the Nov. American Magazine: First: A man to do good work must be healthy. Second: A man to do good work must have comfortable home surroundings. Third: A man to do good work must have a reasonable amount of wholesome recreation and amusement. Fourth: A man to do good work must have the right attitude toward his task.

The Kellogg mills take away the nauseating taste, but remove none of the good properties of castor oil. As Kellogg's Tasteless Castor Oil is merely a purified castor oil, it works better than the evil-tasting, evil smelling dose of the past, and does not upset the stomach. Children take it easily.

Kellogg's Tasteless Castor Oil has been supplied to all druggists, not in bulk, but in neat 2c and 50c bottles. It is necessary to ask for Kellogg's by name, to distinguish it from disguised castor oil, flavored with peppermint and other strong essences. The trademarked label bears a green castor leaf, with the signature, Kellogg's.

Made only by Spencer Kellogg & Sons, Inc., Buffalo, N. Y., refiners of vegetable oils.

Submarine Mines Exploded Fourteen Miles Away. A sensation has been created in military, naval and mining circles of the world by the success of a series of experiments recently conducted in Havre harbor, France, with an apparatus for discharging submerged mines or any high explosive by a wireless current. The apparatus and radioblastic explosion are the invention of a young Italian by the name of M. Ulivi, who resides in Paris. The first experiments were made on July 30 of this year. Different kinds of powder were placed in hermetically sealed cans of iron and submerged in the harbor waters at intervals of one thousand feet apart. They formed, when all submerged, a line nearly twenty thousand feet in length. When everything was in readiness the inventor, stationed on board a yacht, touched a button and one after another all the mines were exploded. There was perfect accord between the discharging station and the floating markers upon the mines. On a second experiment a mine was placed fourteen miles away from the yacht and was exploded by wireless current with great success. Frank T. Clifford, who witnessed some of the experiments, said: "Although the mines were submerged far from shore the detonation or explosive noise from them was heavier than from the firing of the largest coast defense guns planted on the cliffs behind my hotel, and the vibration made the hotel building quiver. In several instances where I saw the mines discharged, columns of water rose in the air to a height of fifty feet or more." Apparently the invention differs from anything hitherto known. With this invention of Ulivi the only requisite for an explosion is actual contact of the powders with some metal. By the discovery of special radiations in the order of the infrared radiations known as F rays, and by the construction of powerful and ingenious apparatus, Ulivi is able to ignite by resonance explosives inclosed in metallic containers and placed at a distance. It is, in fact, a new application of the wonderful invention of wireless telegraphy. The engineer, who directs the apparatus first seeks, with the aid of a special projector, the metallic masses which are to be found in a certain radius of land or water. The return wireless waves reveal to him not only the distance to the mine to be exploded, but also accurately its radiomagnetic activity or capacity. The engineer then sends the exact wireless wave which will produce inside of the iron can the spark that is to cause the explosion. There are no two metallic plates ever made that are identically alike. If such were not the case the invention of Ulivi would be fraught with great danger. For example, any or all mines placed for war defense purposes or for excavating might be unexpectedly exploded at once. Therefore, it is important to know that for each mine a separate wireless wave must be sent out. The terrible potential power of the invention from one point of view is this—if nations intend to go to war again and to keep up war, they will have to abandon their navies and do all their fighting on land or in the air, and then run chances. Two men with a tug can place sufficient of these mines in an hour's time to blow up the best battleships of the world, and the operators can be from ten to fourteen miles away when the wireless causes the explosion. No battleship can be safe under any circumstances with such an invention in existence. The French minister of war who witnessed the experiments said that the apparatus would make it necessary for humanity to change all its tactics of fighting if war was to continue. Mellow in Flavor. If there is a difference between rural wit and any other kind, it is this—that rural wit is mellow in flavor. In this it resembles English wit; the rough corners have been rounded off by the attrition of years, and more nearly perfect jokes result. Ira Beasore drove into town just before the big rain the other day, and he saw Orlo Tuttle setting tubs and barrels under all the spouts around his house. So Ira pulls up and hollers at Orlo: "Hey, Orlo! What ye doin'?" "Looks like rain, and I'm a-settin' out these tubs so's the woman can have some soft water for her washin' Monday," answers Orlo, all innocent like, and not thinking what a great coddler Ira is. "Sho!" says Ira, "You won't git no soft water." "Why won't I?" "Cause it's going to rain hard. Haw-haw-haw! Git ep!" It is claimed that some of the eucalypts of Australia are taller than the California redwoods, hitherto considered the highest trees in the world.

Returning, leaves Portland week days at 7 p. m., Sundays at 7:30, arriving at New York at 6 a. m. John W. McFrederick, aged forty years, was killed Thursday in the yard of the Sargent Lumber Co., at South Brewer. He was riding on the front end of a wood-car which was running down a grade, and holding on by a stake, which gave way, precipitating him in front of the car, which passed over him. George Paradis, aged twenty-six, of Waterville, was struck by a stray bullet while walking on a main highway near Sidney Sunday, and is in a critical condition. The bullet passed entirely through his body, just above the abdomen. Neither the injured man nor his two brothers, who were with him, heard the report of a rifle. Red Men is a purely American patriotic order, and as such favors every organization which in any way relieves the suffering, adds to the happiness, or benefits the condition of the American people. It does not compete with any other order. Alonzo Bacon, employed in the government fish hatchery at Grand Lake Stream, was mistaken for a deer and killed Thursday. Bacon was working by himself in a stream near Dobsis lake "stripping" fish, when he was shot, presumably by Clifford Pease, who was hunting, from Patten's camp. Bacon was shot through the legs, and other members of the party at once started with him for Grand Lake Stream, about twenty-five miles. The shock and loss of blood resulted in Bacon's death while on the way, about three hours after the accident. The victim of the accident was a registered guide, and leaves a wife and several children. MT. DESERT FERRY. Miss Elizabeth Jellison closed her school at East Sullivan Friday. State Highways. ELLSWORTH, ME., Nov. 17, 1913. To the Editor of The American:

I think the State highway commissioners did just right in selecting Bangor as the place to give a hearing on the State automobile trunk line between Bangor and Bar Harbor.

I believe the highway commission is big enough to decide the best route to be established. This trunk line between Bangor and Bar Harbor is not a Hancock county matter...

Amos Howard, aged twenty, of Hodgdon, leaped on the muzzle of his shot-gun Sunday. Of course it went off, and tore a gaping hole in his shoulder, carrying away a portion of his shoulder blade.

Robert Faceau, of Biddeford, did the same thing Sunday, except that he rested his left wrist on the muzzle. He will lose his hand. He may die.

Miss Georgia Boucher, aged twenty-three, played target for her little nephew, Joseph Boucher, aged eleven. She stood up twenty feet away and let him shoot at her. Of course Joseph said the gun wasn't loaded. The shot took effect in Miss Boucher's leg. She will live, but won't play target any more.

IS CUP IN DANGER?

Yachtsmen Think Sir Thomas Lipton's Chances Better. The America's cup is in serious danger, says a writer in a New York paper.

The best informed yachtsmen are of opinion that the coming series of races will be the hardest in the history of that big international prize, and that unless yachtsmen realize very soon what has to be done to keep the cup in this country, Sir Thomas Lipton will have his best opportunity of carrying it away.

Conditions this year are such that at present yachtsmen and designers are working almost in the dark on its defense, and much more strenuous work has to be done very shortly than has been done up to date for the defense of the trophy.

The officers of the club always have been very generous with the subscriptions to new syndicates for the purpose of building cup defenders, and this year, as on former occasions, the flag officers, past and present, have subscribed liberally to a fund which is to defray the cost of building a new yacht by Herreshoff and to pay its running expenses.

According to the rules which are to govern the building of these cup yachts, a designer has lots of latitude. He may turn out a big-bodied vessel, a vessel with displacement, and on that hull put a big driving power. The rules put a premium on displacement and a penalty on power, so that the gain on a yacht having lots of displacement equalizes the penalty incurred by its excessive sail area or driving power.

This year there is at present no trial yacht against which the one defender to be built by Herreshoff can be raced. There is no racing yacht of seventy-five feet water-line in these waters.

The challenger will be sailed against the older yacht, and the races will show Designer Nicholson just what he has to do to improve the challenger and to get into perfect racing form.

It takes about four months to build one of these yachts. After an order for a vessel has been placed, it takes four to five weeks to assemble the material. If bronze or high grade steel is used, that metal has to be rolled specially for the purpose, and it takes time to turn out frames, angles and the thousand and one things that go to make a well-built hull.

A common mistake of local advertisers is to estimate the value of advertising space of one newspaper by the amount asked by some other publication.

WHY HE DOES IT. Druggist Patcher Gives Reasons for Selling at Half-Price. "It isn't often that I have faith enough in the medicines put up by other people to be willing to offer to refund the money if it does not cure," said druggist G. A. Patcher to one of his many customers, "but I am glad to sell Dr. Howard's specific for the cure of constipation and dyspepsia on that plan. "The Dr. Howard Co., in order to get a quick introductory sale, authorized me to sell the regular fifty-cent bottle of their specific for half price, 25 cents, and although I have sold a lot of it, and guaranteed every package, not one has been brought back as unsatisfactory. "I am still selling the specific at half price, although I cannot tell how long I shall be able to do so. Any person who is subject to constipation, sick headache, dizziness, liver trouble, indigestion or a general played-out condition, ought to take advantage of this opportunity. If the specific does not cure them, they can come right back to my store, and I will cheerfully refund their money."

CORPORATION FORMED.

Ellsworth People Hold Large Timber Interests in New Brunswick. The incorporation of the Pokiook Land & Water Power Co., of Pokiook, New Brunswick, was perfected in Ellsworth last week. The stock of the company is owned principally by Ellsworth people, all of whom are represented on the board of directors. The capital stock is $99,000. The directors are Dr. A. C. Hagerthy, Mrs. Hagerthy and Howard B. Moor, of Ellsworth; Dr. Rufus E. Hagerthy, of Sedgwick, and Arthur L. Slipp and Richard B. Hanson, of Fredericton, N. B. Dr. Rufus Hagerthy is president; Mrs. A. C. Hagerthy, vice-president, and Dr. A. C. Hagerthy, secretary and treasurer. Mr. Moor is general manager of the company, and exercises personal supervision over its operations, making five or six trips annually to Pokiook.

Ellsworth people first became interested in the timberlands of New Brunswick some five or six years ago, when J. T. Giles and Dr. Hagerthy purchased a part of the present tract at Pokiook. Later Mr. Giles sold his interest in the tract. Contiguous lands have since been bought, until now the company owns 19,000 acres on the Pokiook river, which river it controls, together with two saw mills, a sash and blind mill, seven dwelling houses and a store. The water power is a valuable one.

The mills are being operated under lease, and the company will confine its operations for the present, at least, to the sale of stumps. A new railroad, the St. John & Quebec Valley, is just being completed through the tract, and a station will be built at Pokiook. The tract is located about forty miles from Fredericton.

The Pokiook river is one of wild scenic beauty. In a run of about 300 feet from the dam to the St. John river, there is a drop of 105 feet, through a gorge with vertical sides rising 100 feet from the stream. The run is too rough for logs, which are carried by a V-sluice from the dam to the St. John river.

John Jones' Find

It Was a Vacant House That Paid a Good Rental

By NATHAN B. TOWNSEND

Johnny Jones, a Maine farmer boy, went to the city to make a fortune, but, getting stranded, started to walk home, a hundred miles, usually sleeping out of doors.

One afternoon while wending his way eastward along the coast he came to a handsome country residence standing alone. Looking about him, he could not see another house, though the coast was open in either direction for several miles. But Johnny doubted if he could get any comfort in the place, for he could see no evidence of its being occupied. The shutters were closed, not one being left open. Then, too, there was an old look about the house. The shingles on the roof were black and crumpled, the woodwork in places was rotten, and only the brick of which the house was mainly built was solid.

"If I could get inside," said John to himself, "I could at least keep warm, and the night promises to be cold."

He had on only the thinnest clothing and shivered as a chill November wind struck him. Climbing the fence—the gate was fastened with a rusty chain and padlock—he went up on to the porch and began to look about him for a means of entrance. He was not long in finding a shutter with a loose fastening and a pane of broken glass behind it. Putting his hand inside, he unlocked the sash and raised it.

To his surprise, the room into which he looked was furnished. True, there was a moldy look about the furniture, but it was of a fine quality, though old fashioned. John climbed over the window sill and inspected the furnishings at closer range. He was in the drawing room among damask covered chairs and sofas and velvet curtains to the windows. A piano stood at one end, and John struck the keys. He was startled at the breaking of the stillness. It seemed to him that the shades of those who had once inhabited this house, who had years ago locked and left it, had cried out at his intrusion.

John fell to wondering why so much valuable property was left to rot. Though young, he considered the financial feature connected with it. Had the property been sold years before it would have brought what to him would have been a fortune. There must be some reason why it had been suffered to sink to ruin.

John hesitated about spending the night in so ghoulish a place, and had it not been for the cold without he would have preferred to sleep under the stars. As it was, he looked about for a bed and, though he was hungry, finally got on to one of the couches upstairs. But it seemed to him that he was lying among worms. He took hold of a coverlet to draw it over him, and it parted through decay. This was too much for him; he arose and felt his way downstairs and, finding a lounge covered with leather, though it was stiff through age, stretched himself on it and fell asleep.

He was awakened during the night by voices. For a few moments he could not recall where he was. Then he listened for the direction of the sound and concluded that it came from under him. Presently a light flashed through a crack in the floor. Sliding off the lounge, he crawled to the crack and put his ear to it.

"We've got to run in some o' these goods," said one in a man's voice. "This cellar is full."

"Why not store the next lot above?"

"What rot! Don't you know we've taken ever' pains to keep any one from looking in here? Put goods on the floor above, and some boy or some tramp will look in, see them and report the fact."

"It's a wonder no one has got on to us as it is," remarked a third man. "They've gone around this depot often. Fact is, it's well known that Crawford owns it, and Crawford is above suspicion."

"We pay him enough rent for it."

"Rent be hanged! He's one of us."

"He tells me the place can't remain much longer as it is. A number of real estate men have been to him to buy it. They want to fix it up and make it pay."

"Crawford is making it pay well enough."

This was the last heard of a dialogue between different men, none of whom John could see. He heard something fall and thought a bolt was shot, though he could not be sure of this, then all was silent again. He lay awake, thinking about what he had heard, but couldn't make out anything except that the basement was used for the storage of goods. Were they stolen articles? Were they barrels of liquor manufactured illegally? The reason for the house remaining in its present condition was apparent. This man Crawford was keeping it for a purpose. It had doubtless long been shut up and was not an object of curiosity. Turning these things over in his mind, John fell asleep again.

When he awoke in the morning the sun was shining in through a broken blind. John arose from his couch and looked about him. He was in a library. Books were on the shelves, but they were dusty and dingy. He went through a door into a pantry and through the pantry into the dining room. He opened some cupboard doors in a vain hope of finding something to eat. There was not a crust, and not a crust had been there for years. He went to the stairs leading down into the cellar, but the door separating the cellar and main floor was fastened. He tried to kick it open, but failed to make any impression on it.

Leaving the house by the window through which he had entered, he looked about the brickwork below the first floor. There were but two small windows, over both of which boards had been placed on the inside. There was not a crack through which he could look within.

How were the goods taken in? There were no marks of wheels on the entrance road. Indeed, the grass grew on it as well as on the lawn. The chain and lock on the gate gave no evidence of having been moved in a long while. Toward the ocean a distance of several hundred yards there were no tracks of any kind. There was no opening from the cellar except within the house. This matter of the storage of goods was a mystery.

John walked out to the rocks which formed the shore. Here he was more at home, for he had been brought up near the water. Naturally his eyes fell upon the irregularity that marked the shore. There were many protuberances, many indentations. He descended to the sea level and, the tide being at the ebb, noticed a place where the water washed in under the rocks. John wondered how far in it extended. He couldn't tell without going in under the rock, and this was impossible without a boat or a raft unless he swam, and the water was too cold for swimming.

The boy pondered on what he should do. Should he go on home or remain and try to solve the mystery? Curiosity held him. He would go back to the house and see if he could not look into the cellar through the crack at which he had listened. He did so, but the cellar was too dark for him to see anything. His mind reverted to the overhanging rock, and he went back to have another look at it. The rising tide had partly covered the place, and he knew that it would be nearly twelve hours before the water would give him an opportunity to examine it again.

He resolved to improve the interval by securing a boat or building a raft to use in his investigations. Going to a wood near by, he saw plenty of fallen timber, and after walking several miles to a house where he was given some breakfast he returned and carried sufficient wood to the shore to make a float. He laced the pieces together with twigs and when the tide subsided in the afternoon put his raft into the water and paddled to the rock in question. Lying flat, he pulled himself in under the land some twenty feet, when he came to an iron door. It was fastened with an iron latch, which, being covered by water at every tide, was so rusty that he could not move it. He scuttled out, got a stone, returned and by hammering opened the door. There before him lay a subterranean passage leading in the direction of the house.

Not having a light, the young discoverer did not attempt to investigate any further. Besides, he had no mind to be caught in a trap by an incoming tide. He got out as quickly as possible and, sitting on a rock, bethought himself what next to do. He concluded to go on home and consult with some one about his find. He was not sure but that there was something in it for him, and he wished to find a way to get it out.

John was a secretive boy, and, though he told about his experiences in the city, he said nothing about the house by the sea. In a few days, armed with some carpenter's tools and a candle, he went back to it and, closing the shutter behind him through which he entered, took up a part of the floor, went down into the cellar and found it full of boxes and bales.

By this time it occurred to the boy that the house was a storage depot for smugglers. He found a door in the cellar leading into the passage to the water and presumed that the goods were carried in by that route. Replacing everything as he had left it, he made his way to the nearest port of entry and, calling for the collector, told him that he had discovered a depot for smuggled goods. He was too smart to give any clue to it till he had made terms with the government. This necessitated some correspondence between the officials and the government, and it was finally agreed that any smuggled goods that John should point out to the revenue officers half the amount accruing by confiscation should go to him.

These preliminaries having been settled, John led the officers to the house and showed them the goods. But, being desirous of capturing the smugglers, they placed a watch in the house and waited for them to come again. It was several weeks before the unsuspecting men fell into the trap. When they did they found both the egress by the passage to the sea and the one up into the house stopped. They were all taken just after they had deposited a new, valuable boat-load of goods.

Johnny received a small fortune for his information. He decided to go to college and is now a lawyer with a good practice. Inquiries as to the lonely house resulted in his learning that the parties owning it had gone abroad many years before and left it to be sold as it stood. It changed hands several times without being occupied and was finally bought by the Crawford mentioned by the smugglers as an available depot for smuggled goods. He had grown rich by this means.

A Diplomatic Secret

By EDWIN D. TUCKER

Several gentlemen were discussing the affairs of Mexico, which were absorbing a great deal of attention, when one of them said:

"I have heard a curious story about Napoleon III's Mexican scheme repeated a number of times in different forms. I wonder which is correct."

"Do you refer," asked a white headed octogenarian, "to the case of how the czar headed off the French emperor?"

"I do."

"Well, then, I can give you the true version of that story, for I was directly connected with what occurred."

"It was very young at the time, but not too young to be connected with the American legation at the court of St. James. One evening at a reception a member of the British cabinet accosted me, though I had had no introduction to him, and after a preliminary conversation on ordinary topics drew me into a small room where we were alone and said to me:

"You have been mentioned to me as a person fitted to be the repository of an important diplomatic secret—indeed, to carry out an important diplomatic move."

"He then pledged me to secrecy, impressing me with the importance of locking within myself what he was about to say to me, after which he proceeded:

"Our good queen, with her usual sense and foresight, is in favor of permitting you Americans to settle your quarrels among yourselves. The emperor of the French, who must be constantly diverting the mind of the various factions he rules from himself, has some scheme with reference to making a lodgment somewhere in North America. He is importuning us to join him in intervention with a view to separate the United States into two sections. We do not wish to antagonize him by a refusal, and we do not wish to enter into any arrangement with a view to interfering between the states."

"There is a power which would gladly block the emperor's game did that power know that the game was hatching. I refer to Russia. The czar since the Crimean war does not love France, and he does not love England. We cannot join Russia in a coalition to prevent intervention. Should the czar know that France is endeavoring to induce us to join her in her proposed scheme he would at once take measures to prevent it. This is exactly what we should like. It would render a refusal of Napoleon's request needless and leave us to remain neutral in American affairs."

"Diplomatic secrets sometimes leak out without any one being aware of where the leak is located. You and I know exactly where this leak is, and it must remain between you and me alone."

"You except President Lincoln, of course?"

"Of course I do not. There is but one person besides yourself who may know it."

"Mr. Seward?"

"No; the czar of Russia."

"The czar? How can I reach him?"

"That I must leave to you. Considering that you are a member of the American embassy here, I do not think you should have much trouble."

"But my chief, the American ambassador?"

"He, too, must remain ignorant. You must leave London without his knowledge."

"But the proof for the czar of the truth of my story?"

"I will furnish you with that."

"I left London the next morning before dawn armed with the proof that had been promised. My mother was at the time in Berlin, and I forged a telegram from her begging me to come to her if I expected to see her alive. This telegram I showed to my chief and was given a leave of absence. I did not go to Berlin, but I did go to St. Petersburg. On reaching the capital I went to the minister of foreign affairs, showed him papers substantiating my position with the American embassy at London and informed him that I had information concerning a cabal to interfere in the affairs of the American republic, but that I was not permitted to submit it except to his majesty."

"The war between the American states was at that time engaging the attention of the world, and the czar was only too glad of information concerning it. He promptly accorded me a private interview and listened to me attentively till I had reached the end of my story. When he asked for my proofs, I produced them, and he was both surprised and convinced. He asked me how I came by them, and I refused to tell. That ended the interview."

"Returning to London, I reported to my chief that my mother's health was much improved, and I settled down to my daily duties. I met the cabinet member through whom the secret had leaked at a function and in a few words told him of my mission. He apparently did not expect that the czar would intimate to me what he might do in the premises."

"There began to be a feeling among the members of the diplomatic corps at London that some scheme would soon be inaugurated in the way of intervention in America. The rumors were presently verified by the arrival of an ocean steamer bringing the news of a Russian fleet having entered New York bay."

IS YOUR BED AGAINST THE WALL?

"Snowball" is a good-natured little colored boy in whom Fred Ward takes a protecting interest. Mr. Ward was telling a crowd of youngsters one day that there were two sides to a bed; namely, the smile side and the cross side.

"Some mornings you get out on the cross side," he said. "You feel mean, you are unkind to little sister and little brother, you cry when your mother speaks to you, you make life miserable for everybody around you. But some mornings you get out on the smile side. You love your sister and brother, you mind your mamma without whimpering, you are kind to the cook, you go singing all the day."

"Mister Ward," spoke up Snowball, "my bald ain't got only a smile side to git out of."

"How's that, Snowball?"

"Kayse de cross side is pused up again de wall."

38 Betterments in 1914 Indian Motorcycles

Complete electrification of the motorcycle is successfully accomplished for the first time in the 1914 Indian models, which include an electric starter, electric lights, electric signal, and rear drive speedometer, as the leading features among thirty-eight betterments incorporated in this famous make for the coming season. In addition to being the pioneer exponent of the electrically equipped motorcycle, the Indian also is the first to carry as standard equipment, such a complete assortment of the very latest accessories. By these two tremendous forward steps, the Indian maintains easily its pride of place as the long recognized fashion arbiter of the industry.

The Indian Electric Starter.
In the development of a successful electric starter for arduous motorcycle service, the Indian engineers equalled their great triumph of 1913—the Cradle Spring Frame. The Indian electric starter is a powerful, multipolar type, motor-generator, small, neat and compact. It is mounted on the left side of the engine, and always is connected with it. Therefore, should the rider still the engine in traffic, or on a crossing, it can instantly be restarted by throwing a switch, which brings the starter into action.

Another decided advantage of the Indian electric starter is its high operating speed, spinning the engine at 500 r. p. m., so that the latter begins firing very quickly after cranking commences, and effecting a saving in battery current. As soon as the engine begins running, the starter automatically becomes a generator, and renews the energy taken from the batteries for starting, lighting, signaling and ignition.

The battery equipment consists of two sets of specially constructed, high capacity units. Injury which might be caused by too rapid charging, or overcharging, is prevented by a magnetic current regulator placed in the feed line. An

ATLANTIC.

A pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Joyce Saturday evening, Nov. 15, when their eldest daughter, Vera, was married to Sidney L. Joyce, of this place. The room in which the ceremony took place was prettily decorated with evergreen, an arch being arranged in one corner under which the bride and groom stood. The wedding gown was of white crepe de chine and the bride carried a bouquet of white chrysanthemums. The wedding march was played by Miss Traak, a close friend of the bride. During the evening Miss Amy, a sister of the bride, played several piano solos. Owing to the illness of the bride's automatic cut-out prevents the batteries discharging through the starter. Leakage of battery solution is prevented by special design vents, the construction of which is patented.

The Indian 1914 line will consist of seven solo models, a side car and a quick delivery van. All machines will be chain driven, and six models will mount twin engines of seven horse-power. As 90 per cent. of the Indian output of 35,000 machines in 1913 was composed of twins, it is anticipated by the Hendee Manufacturing Co. that no less than 98 per cent. of the tremendous output of 60,000 Indians for 1914 will be required to meet the overwhelming popular demand for twin models. Bearing its name, the 1914 Indian will, as usual, be finished in red only.

Other 1914 Improvements.

Other prominent features of the new models are: Strengthened frames and forks with drop forged fittings throughout, longer wheelbase, more secure engine fastening, new cam design, giving increase in power, heavier motor shafts and inlet valve rocker arm mechanism, new pressed handlebar with irreversible binder post, heavier driving members of two-speed gear and improved change gear control, larger tires, new padded saddles, new channel steel rear stand, new luggage carrier, new metal tool box, with large capacity and spring lock.

Always foremost in the rendering of prompt and efficient mechanical service to Indian owners, the Indian organization has perfected plans whereby Indian users exclusively, wherever they may be located, will enjoy overnight service the coming season. Seven American branches and 2,500 dealers will enable the Indian mounted motorcyclist in 1914 to command 24-hour service, the quickest and most complete ever offered the legions of motorcyclist.

HEALTH and Happiness

demand a properly functioning body and a clear-thinking brain. Nothing so quickly clogs both brain and body as constipation. Irregular bowels induce sluggishness in mind and muscle. A teaspoonful of the famous "L. F." Atwood's Medicine, taken before or after meals, relieves the worst case of constipation in the shortest time, as Mr. J. W. Cady's letter tells:

National Military Home,
Togus, Maine.

"I first used 'L. F.' Atwood's Medicine 40 years ago, when I came from the army. It relieves constipation and keeps the bowels regular. For dizziness and loss of appetite, it is a superior remedy. If people would only try it, they'd be convinced."
