ROOSEVELT'S DEPARTING WORDS TO HIS COUNTRYMEN

On the evening of January 20, at the close of his term of three years, Mr. Roosevelt made his farewell to the nation on the following beautiful and eloquent words:

Of the three terms of three years, the third was the shortest; and yet in that shortest term, the most was done. In the other two, the people were thrown into a condition of ceaseless action, of undiverted energy, of unswerving determination, resulting in the great work of a great period; and yet in that third term the old American flag, and this outside the red and white stripes, the star-spangled banner, the banner of liberty and justice, was thrown into a condition of ceaseless action, of undiverted energy, of unswerving determination, resulting in the great work of a great period.

Our third period has been the period of the ordinary American flag, with the red and white stripes, with the star-spangled banner, the banner of liberty and justice, which has been thrown into a condition of ceaseless action, of undiverted energy, of unswerving determination, resulting in the great work of a great period.

Masks Found in Tombstone That Prove the "Old Gink's" Were Much Like the Modern Ones

The finding of some mummies in an ancient tomb at the foot of the old Gink's has been a revelation to many who have been interested in the study of the "Old Gink's." The masks, it has been learned, were the same as those worn by the "Old Gink's" in their heyday. In fact, many of them have been found in the tombs of the old Gink's, and are now on exhibit at the museum of the old Gink's.
