Here's oneto make the smart old men and women of Maine sit up and take notice. No one would call Mrs. Emily Carter of West Brooksville "old," however. Mrs. Carter had some business in Ellsworth last Friday, so she walked over—a little jaunt of twenty-seven miles. Anyone who knows the condition of the roads in this section in Friday's thaw and rain will realize that it wasn't a summer stroll. Mrs. Carter got a ride a small part of the way, between Surry and Ellsworth. She wanted to start back in the rain and slush Saturday, but Ellsworth friends prevailed upon her to remain over. Sunday morn-ing, about 9 o'clock, she started for home, on foot, for she said she had to be there in time to get supper.

Mrs. George N. Worden received a telegram from Mr. Worden last night announcing that he had accepted the position of county leader of boys' and girls' clubs for Clallam county, Washington, with headquar-ters at Port Angeles. If Clallam county doesn't know it already, Hancock county would like to tell her that she's got the right man, worth coming all the way across the continent for. Mrs. Worden and Miss Sprague will leave for the West next week

Roy Young of Lamoine lost a horse on the Lamoine road Satury evening. The horse got down the snow just beyond the Beechin the snow just beyond the Beech-land corner, and in wallowing around got deep into the snow and slush. After trying for some time to get the animal up alone, he went for assistance. When he returned, the horse was dead from exhaustion and chill. It was at first reported that the horse had drowned in the main road, which would not have been surprising if he had fallen on the flat this side of the Beechland schoolhouse, where there was more than a foot of water across the road than a foot of water across the road in places.

Most men think they are doing a Most men think they are doing a pretty good job when they keep one furnace and the kitchen fire going a winter like this. Listen to this: Edward Haney of Ellsworth, janitor of three schoolhouses and one church, two of the schoolhouses being separated by something like two miles, has kept nine furnaces and five stoves going this winter, mostly with wood, and green wood at that with wood, and green wood at that, and handled it himself, putting it in. And he has kept his buildings com-fortably warm, kept his paths shov-eled and his buildings swept. He says he has shoveled more snow this winter than in all the twenty-eight years he has been at this work put years ne has been at this work put together—and no one will dispute him on that. He is up every morn-ing at 4 o'clock, and has shoveled snow until near midnight when occasnow until near midnight when occasion required, and walked to the Ellsworth Falls school and back once or twice every week. Some job, eh, for one man? Yes, but hear this: Mr. Haney is seventy-eight years old. Now beat it if you can.

Hoyt Smith of East Lamoine, as well known in Ellsworth as in his home town, had a narrow escape from being drowned like a rat in a pail last Thursday. Mr. Smith went pail last Thursday. Mr. Smith went alone to the mineral spring o nthe hill, for water. The snow and ice were high around the cement-walled spring, and as Mr. Smith was dipping the water in a pail, the snow gave way beneath him, and he plunged into the spring. The water in the spring is something like six feet deep and the cement sides and bank of snow and ice around the spring af-forded no hand-hold. To add to his difficult position, he had dislocated one shoulder in his fall into the spring. Mr. Smith was almost exspring. Mr. Smith was almost exhausted and had about given up hope when he succeeded in reaching a board that had fallen from the roof of the spring house, and with the assistance of this dragged himself from the spring. His eries for help had the spring. His cries for help had been heard by a man far down the hill, who reached him after he had succeeded in getting out, and assisted him home. Aside from his dislocat-ed shoulder, Mr. Smith seems to have suffered no ill effects from his trying experience and exposure.

MUTUAL BENEFIT COLUMN. Edited by "Aunt Madge."

MOTTO:-HELPFUL AND HOPEFUL

The purposes of this column are succinctly stated in the title and motto—it is for the mutual benefit, and aims to be helpful and hopeful. Being for the common good it is for the common use—a public servant, a purveyor of information and suggestions, a medium for the interchange of ideas, in this capacity it solicits communications, and its success depends largely on the support given it in this respect. Communications must be signed, but the name of writer will not be printed except by permission. Communications will be subject to approval or rejection by the editor of the column, but none will be rejected without good reason. Address all communications to The American, Elisworth, Me.

A MILLIONAIRE PAUPER

By GEORGE ELMER COBB

(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union)

The mellow glinting sunlight flooded past the open doorway of the forage shed and fell upon a sleeping figure iying prone upon the straw, that of a young man. His face was clear and open, though marked with bruises and scratches, and his clothing torn in places suggested a recent scrimmage common to the lawless district lying beyond Joel Dalton's ranch.

The Daltons, father and daughter, had little to do with the rough and ready groups. The Dalton ranch had become a spot to avoid for the roysterers and miners when on a rampage. A wayfarer might be given a free meal, but old Joel watched him suspicionsly until he was clear of the

"They are a swashbuckling, worth-less set," he told Evaline. "Drink, gambling, and working the old worn out diggings instead of settling down to respectable farming."

Land and its accumulation was the hobby of Dalton and his great dream was to acquire the eight thousand acres known as Grass Valley.

"Some day this stretch will be a perfect paradise," he predicted. "Once real workers get to coming, the man who has the land will reap a royal Evaline had been sent for a hay rake and the discovery of the stranger had startled and then interested Her father appeared abruptly. "What's this, now?" he demanded.

Evaline flushed, for her glance at the handsome intruder was intense. She stepped aside with a certain degree of fear, for she knew her father to be naturally harsh tempered.

"A tramp, eh?" he observed grating-"Worse—a rustler, or looks it."
"Father," ventured Evaline gently, "don't be so rough with him, please. He is young and honest looking."

"He is battered up from a fight, and probably sleeping off a spree. Here, wake up!" The slumberer struggled to his feet.

seizing a heavy cudgel at his side. "You'll not get me again!" he shouted, "you ruffian crew!"

"Oh, excuse me," he added instantly, observing Evaline, "I fancled"but he did not complete the sentence. He moved unsteadily on one foot and winced, and noticing that its shoe was bedabbled with blood Dalton unbent a trifle.

"What's the matter with your foot?" he questioned.

"Only a bullet," replied the intruder.

"He looks half famished," whispered Evaline, "Be gentle with him."

"Since you're so taken with him, give him a meal, if you like," grumbled Dalton. Evaline pitied the helpless condition and apparent suffering of the refugee. "Lean on my shoulder," she said, "and get as far as the house." She got him to the shaded porch where there was a rocking chair, then going to the kitchen and returning with a warmed up, but appetizing meal. She heard voices on the porch after returning to the kitchen. Then her father came to her. "That stranger has a bad foot," he observed. "I want some bandages and the tallow. You can fix up a shake down in the lumber room. Evaline gladly set about providing for the comfort of their guest. He had evidently told Dalton his name, for the latter called him Hudson. At the end of five days the stranger was able to hobble about with a cane. He was pleasant, entertaining and helped Evaline peel potatoes and shell peas, set the table and altogether fell in with domestic ways as if he had once been a home body. Evaline mentioned this to her father. "Somehow he takes great interest in my land ideas," observed Dalton. "He'd ought to be on his way."

One morning there drove up to the house a party of four men. Both Evaline and her father recognized them as members of the county constabulary force. "Looking for Arnold Hudson," spoke up the leader.

"That's me," promptly announced Hudson, stepping forward, "Bound to guard me safe out of the district, eh?" he laughed.

"Got orders and pay to do just that," replied the official, tendering a letter. "He is a son of a big land man at Denver," observed the officer to Dalton. "Worth a million in his own right was looking around for investments. got in the hands of a gang bent on holding him for ransom, got away, escaped and we are deputized to get him back home."

A shade of disappointment and loneliness was in Evaline's eyes as Hudson left them. She watched the little cavalcade disappear down the road like a breath of romance out of her life. A week later, however, Hudson returned with his father and several others.

"They have come to talk business with your father about a great colonization scheme in the valley," Arnold Hudson told Evaline. "I've come to talk what's been on my mind ever since I first saw you."
"What is that?" questioned Evailne

artlessly,
"Love," was the prompt response "My heart is right here, where I lost It to you, and I want you to say you'll take care of it for the rest of our FINE "GRIDIRON" AT COBLENZ

American Soldiers Stationed There
Have Facilities for Almost Every Kind of Sport

Elaborate preparations were made at Cohlenz, Germany, for the football season. Grounds and stadiums which were only partly finished a year ago have been made permanent playing fields, and many of them compare favorably with the best college gridirons in the United States.

The most elaborately finished ground is in Coblenz, known as "Carnival Island." It was on this ground that the Third army championships were decided last season, but the ground at that time was not in as good condition as it is today. Neither were there proper facilities; such as dressing rooms. At this island there are now two reg-war baseball fields, two football fields, a golf course of nine holes, a polo ground, a quarter-mile cinder track, with 220 yard straightaway, and outdoor basketball courts. On another part is a ring for horse shows and nine tennis courts. Suitable bleachers to accommodate

5,000 spectators have been built, and there also are a large number of properly equipped dressing rooms with showers, rubbing tables and store

Not only at Coblenz are there grounds available for the soldiers, but at Andernach, Montabaur, and Neuwled the old grounds left by the A. E. F. have been taken over by the Y. M. C. A. and enlarged and remade in every particular.

PROBABLY THOUGHT A LOT

But Really, Under the Circumstances, There Was Nothing the Actor-Manager Could Say.

The late Oscar Hammerstein, who had a genius for advertising his theatrical enterprises, used to tell a story about an English actor-manager's attempt to follow his example.

"My conferee," Mr. Hammerstein would say, "was having a new theater built in London. Casting about for some good way to advertise it, he decided that an admirable scheme would be to have the workmen while excavating for the foundation come across Roman antiquities. So he stole down to the operation at dead of night and deposited a number of costly, genuine Roman antiquities just below the surface of the spot being excavated.

"The next morning he arrived in haste to hear the news of the great find and report it to the journals. See ing that the men had already dug well below his hidden treasure, he said:

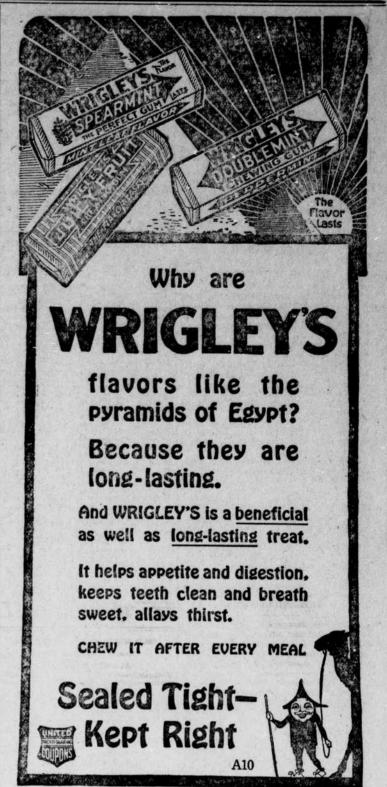

"'Good morning, foreman, Any-thing interesting this morning?" "'No. sir. not a thing, sir,' the foreman answered. "The actor-manager looked at the bulging pockets of the workmen and said nothing. What could he say?"

PARCEL POST ORDERS GIVEN PROMPT ATTENTION

Water Street

LIKE CURES LIKE

By DORA MOLLAN

(@, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

John Nevins was having lunch at his club when excited exclamations from four young men seated at the next table caught his attention. The youths jumped up and crowded around window, Being humanly curious, Nevins turned about and looked out on the street. A youngish woman, modishly dressed, was about to turn the corner. The wind blew smartly. "Oh, boy!" exclaimed one of the young men-he had Celtic red hair-"the Lord is good to the Irish!" John Nevins clenched his hands at what he saw till there were dents in his palms. He favored the backs of the absorbed youths with one baleful glare, then turned abruptly away from his unfinished luncheon and left the club. But on the way back to the office an inborn sense of humor came to his rescue and he chuckled aloud. He had had an inspiration.

At five minutes to nine on the following morning, when Viola Nevins appeared at the office of the Nevins famlly physician, it was plain that something had seriously upset the usual calm poise of the lady's manner. Al so it was evident to Dr. Balfour that she hardly expected him to believe what she proceeded to relate concerning her husband.

Now Dr. Balfour had known John Nevins much longer than had Mrs. Nevins, and, though Viola would have resented any such assertion, felt that he understood him much better. Therefore it was with very little misgiving that he stated his opinion.

"No, I hardly think your husband is losing his mind, though the actions do seem peculiar, I must admit. My advice: Keep calm; act as though nothing unusual were happening, but watch him closely. If he develops other eccentricities let me know."

Some hours later Mrs. Nevins awaited John's return from the office. Seated before the library fire, she was comfortable in body but uncomfortable in mind. The latest fashion magazine failed to distract her thoughts from incidents of the previous evening, even though it exploited a brandnew fashion detail at which Viola ordinarily would have gasped with joy. Being the first to introduce a new style in her own home town had grown to be more than a fad with Mrs. Nevins; it had become a fixed principle. The click of the latchkey heralded the approach of the man of the house. word of greeting, a connubial kiss. and John Nevins departed upward to freshen for dinner as was his wont. "Nothing unusual about his manner so far." Viola reassured herself as she awaited his returning footsteps.

They came tap-tap, on the polished hardwood of the stairs. Viola felt her fears justified. Hastily she reminded herself that the vain expostulations and half hysterical pleadings of the evening before must not be repeated. Dr. Balfour's advice had been to keep calm, and calm she kept as John Nevins hobbled into the room. his feet, unusually small for a man of his size, encased in exaggeratedly high-heeled pumps. resplendently buckled. He addressed his wife with matter-of-fact seriousness.

"If I don't make faster progress than this, learning to manage these things, it will be days yet before I'll have the confidence to wear them to the office."

At this development of ultimate purpose Mrs. Nevins gave one horrified gasp. Then her attention was diverted to the imperative need of standing between John and the maid as the latter appeared in the doorway announce dinner. When the girl had departed kitchenward in search of soup. Viola offered her arm as an aid in negotiating the perilous combination of rugs and polished floors. John scorned it.

Throughout the dinner, much to Viloa's relief, John kept his feet well under the table-sie had such a horror of the servants talking! Also his onversation was absolutely sane. Mrs. Nevins almost began to doubt Ellsworth, Maine the evidence of her own senses about the shoes. But no; it was all true; for when the meal was over there was John, mincing his way slowly to the library door, upon those horrible heels. Viola waited for him to disappear through it before she rang for the maid. Then, even as her hand found the bell, there came a crash from the library-and silence.

Instantly she realized what had happened. Also that she must get there first and get rid of the ridiculous footwear before the servants arrived. If the worst should transpire there must be no gossip about "queer actions of poor Mr. Nevins" to go the rounds. Viola flew-to find her apprehensions justified, and John lying motionless on the library floor.

When Dr. Balfour responded promptly to Mrs. Nevins' distressed phone call, the master of the house was still unconscious. Blood flowed from a cut on his head. The physiclan had the injury dressed in no time, waved the servants out of the room and said: "It's a trifling scalp wound. He is merely knocked out and may come to any moment now. What happened?"

Mrs. Nevins, in mute explanation, produced from under the davenport, where she had hurriedly hidden them, the evidence at once of the cause of the accident and of her husband's unbalanced state.

"Um-m!" remarked Dr. Balfour,
"haven't I seen you wear shoes much like these yourself?"

Mrs. Nevins resented the tone of the inquiry. It seemed to put her on the defensive. "Certainly," she answered; "but since these are women's shoes. will you please tell me why I shouldn't wear similar ones? The strange thing is a man's wanting to wear them, it seems to me.'

Because Mrs. Nevins was looking straight-and somewhat defiantly-at Dr. Balfour she just here missed something which that worthy gentleman saw. During his wife's speech John Nevins had opened his eyes, looked at his physician—and winked.

"Rather small of Viola to object to my wearing shoes just like hers, don't you think, doctor," he interjected suddenly from the couch, "especially when she has taken to wearing socks precisely like mine? I came a cropper tonight, but I'll learn how to manage the cussed things yet-and give the girls at the women's club something to laugh about when I go by. We can't let the men's club have all the fun and free shows, can we, doctor?"

"John," cried Viola, half laughing in her boundless relief that it was all a joke after all, and not a case of incipient dementia; also with her arms tight around her husband's neck. "I had no idea you saw me that dayor would mind it so much. And to think you might have killed yourself trying to cure me. Why, John, dear, you are more to me than all the fashions that ever were invented. And I'll-I'll go looking like a dud hereafter if you want me to." "You couldn't," said John, "not if you tried."

Which tactful remark closed a painful incident in the happy life of the Nevinses. And that old wheeze about history repeating itself, is, so far as it relates to Mrs. Nevins' socks, a fib.

AT LEAST GOT SOMETHING

Chaplain, Unable to Procure All That Was on His List, Did the Best He Could.

Father Duffy's life was at stake. Father Duffy was shepherd of as wild and rollicking a regiment of Irishmen as ever rushed a Boche machine gun nest or struggled with a foreign tongue to make a French colleen understand. Father Duffy reached Remagen with the One Hundred Fifth infantry to find the place as bare of army extras as a miser's pantry.

Plainly the good father had to get something for his flock. But he was unable to get to Coblenz to get itthat is, he couldn't get a pass. So he went A. W. O. L.

When he reached the headquarters town of the Third army he dug up the secretary of the Knights of Columbus and yelled for help. The secretary told him to make out a list of things the flock needed. Father Duffy went to it. He overlooked nothing and when the list was completed it looked like a suffrage petition.

The secretary then took Father Duffy to the Knights of Columbus ware-"We're having a little transhouse. portation difficulty," said the secretary, "and most of our stuff is still to come through. I don't know what we have "

But the One Hundred Sixty-Fifth's chaplain figured that even if he ob tained one-half of the stuff on his list his outfit would be satisfied. It would be something.

They reached the warehouse, wen inside and rummag d around consider ably. Then they came out again.

Father Duffy carried in one hand two pictures, in brown sepia, of General John J. Pershing. In the other he had a deck of playing cards.-Stars and Stripes.

The Great Auk. The great auk could not fly: Its little wings resembled fins. But it swam hundreds of miles out of the bays in spring and back again in the autumn to and from the batching places. It was helpless on land and a prey to any enemy larger than itself, Some naturalists used to claim that the auk ame as far south as the coast of Maine, but in the opinion of most authorities the bird went no further than Newfoundland, It is just possible that the bones discovered by ornithologists farther south may have been conveyed there in the guano, when it Hancock Co. Nursery & Seed Co. was an article of commerce.

Exercise

Anyone whose occupation or duties prevents some daily outdoor exercisis likely to be troubled with biliousness and other digestive evils. If possible you should walk to business every morning, but be sure to eat a heavy breakfast just before you start. It is advisable to take long walks before eating, but at least a quarter hour should elapse if possible after a heavy meal, before indulging in any active exercise.

At the first sign of any disorder, take one or two teaspoonfuls of "L. F." Atwood's Medicine. This will keep your digestive organs in good order and relieve the disturbing symptoms. If you suffer from sick headaches, regular doses of this tried and tested old remedy will bring blessed relief by removing the cause. The relief will not be temporary, at the expense of some other organ, but will be a permanent improvement for the entire system. Get a 50c bottle today from any medicine dealer. "L.F." BOTH SLIGHTLY IN ERROR

Physician and Lovesick Youth Were Alike Too Quick to Jump to Conclusions.

There's a certain physician in Los Angeles who admits the joke's on him. Incidentally, he will shortly lose his daughter. He tells it this way:

"I was in my study when the door was flung open and in came Jack. I know him well, and just a glance told me that he was far from being his usual self. Indeed, he looked positive-

"Without waiting for him to speak commenced an examination. His heart was fluttering, his brow was fever heat, his pulse was racing.

HISTORIANS HAVE NOT SAID

Of Course There is Just a Possibility That Mrs. Patrick Henry Was Unsympathetic.

They were having one of the usual family quarrels over his having been at a meeting at the Commercial club while she was "at home all alone and so lonesome."

"You don't wish me to have any city or country spirit, either," he finally told her hotly. "I wonder where our country would be today if all the men who have lived in it had stayed at home and petted their wives all their off hours as you are wanting me to do for you?"

"Well, the women always suffer." she retorted. "Public men never have time to appreciate their wives and sympathize with-

Then he interrupted her. "Oh, that cry for sympathy" (he was angry now). "I suppose that it's a nation old cry. I imagine that while Patrick Henry was at the Virginia legislature making his famed speech, 'Give me liberty or give me death,' that Mrs. Patrick H. was at home walling, Give me sympathy or give me death."-Indianapolis News.

Shakespeare Down to Date.

Justice Wayne, dramatic actress finds an explanation of the question as to why Shakespearian plays seldom win financial reward in what she terms Shakespeare's inability to give his productions catchy titles. She suggests a repertoire of the bard's plays rechristened to meet popular demands for stimulating titles. She suggests "How Could You, Juliet?" as more appropriate than plain "Romeo and Juliet." She also would substitute "Call of the Flesh" for "The Merchant of Venice;" "Strangled in Bed" for "Othello; "The Nutty Princess" for "Hamlet;" "Henry, Whom Do You Love?" for "Henry V;" "Big Dick" for "Richard the Third;" "The Knife" for "Julius Caesar" and "Moonlight and Honeysuckle" for "Midsummer Night's

The Cheerful Exterminator.

On moving into our honeymoon apartment we discovered that it was sadly in need of the services of an ex-terminator. With a bride's ignorance of apartment house life and the clubby ways of the cockroach, I regarded this as a personal disgrace, and took great care to keep it a profound se cret from our friends.

One day, while exhibiting my shiny new kitchen equipment to a girl friend, I answered the back-door buzzer, and there was the exterminator. inquiring in a loud, cheerful tone,

SEEK FOR TRADE IN ARCTIC

Boston Capitalists Form Organization Something Like the Famous Hudson's Bay Company.

Word has just come out of the North of a rival to the Hudson's Bay company that has sprung up. It is an organization backed by Boston interest and its aim is to get a share of the trade that the "Ancient and Honorable Association of Adventurers" has monopolized for over a century. Las spring Capt. Louis Lane of Nome, Alaska, was sent into the Arctic to establish a string of 28 trading posts for the Boston body.

The expedition went into the North via Calgary, Alberta, with eight or loads of goods, of an estimated value of $240,000. In addition to this ther sent in a river power boat for open tion on the Mackenzie river. The ves sel was sent in sections and assemble on the big river. The party worker slowly down the river, canvassing and exploring among the tribes and only reached Fort Macpherson when winter came. They will stay there until spring opens the river and allows them ! proceed further. The company intends locating its posts by the ploneering party, and will then keep them supplied by means of ships from Nome during the short summer.

"I can honestly say that I owe say life to Peruna. After some of the best doctors in the country gave me up and told me I could not live another month. Peruna saved me. Travelling from town to town, throughout the country and having to go into all kinds of badly heated stores and buildings, sometimes standing up for hours at a time while plying my trade as auctioneer, it is only natural that I had colds frequently; so when this would occur I paid little attention to it, until last December when I contracted a severe case, which, through neglect on my part settled on my lungs. When almost too late, I began doctoring, but, without avail, until I heard of Peruna. It cured me; so I cannot praise it too highly."

UNCLE SAM'S GAME RESERVE

Island of Afognak, on South Coast of Alaska, Peculiarly Adapted for the Purpose.

One of the most picturesquely interesting parts of our national domain is a large island off the south coast of Alaska. It is called Afognak and is about 65 miles long by 40 in width, with a very irregular shore line and deeply indented by bays.

It is the property of the government, and in 1892 was set aside by President Harrison as a game and fish reserve. The important purpose that it serves is that of a preserve for salmon, all the finest varieties of which run up its stream in great numbers at the breeding season to spawn.

Afognak is a mountainous island, of volcanic origin, its loftiest peak rising to an elevation of 1,300 feet. In the interior are a number of large which are the breeding grounds of the salmon. One of these. Letnik lake, is seven miles long, and on its shore is located a big government fish hatchery.

In the days of long ago, before the United States bought Alaska, the salmon fishery of Afognak was operated the Russian-American company. which established on the island a colony of its superannuated and pensioned These were Aleuts, whose descendants today compose the native population, somewhat more than 400. though their blood is much mixed.

Soldiers and Banana Growing.

The New South Wales government has not been long in providing its returning soldiers with work. One of the enterprises undertaken with this object is the cultivation of bananas on a large scale. There is no fruit crop that yields such a quick return the banana and in the present flourishing state of the market no better undertaking could have been selected, given the right men. It is not work for the lazy. But among the demobilized troops are plenty of men who are young, tough and teachable. Four hundred acres have been taken as a beginning and each settler has 12 months' probation before a black is intrusted to him. The sum of £625 is advanced to each for implements, stock, and house-building material. The soldiers have already started and enjoy their rough life in the hills. The experienced planter, Mr. C. Rose, who is in charge, sees nothing but success shood in reward for their effort t.

CHILD ALMOST DEAD GRANDMOTHER SAVES LIFE.

GRANDMOTHER SAVES LIFE.

Roxbury, Mass. A grandmother in Roxbury writes: "I put great faith in your medicine, and one of my children was dying. The doctor said she could not live until morning, and I ran out to the drug store, got a bottle of Dr. True's Elixir, was so excited I gave her the half of the bottle at once, and at night I gave her the other half. I thought, it's either kill or cure, for the doctor says she is dying anyway; but she did not die. She went to sleep, the first sleep for a week, and the next morning she passd two worms, red in color, six inches long. The doctor came to see if she was dead, but he ran out pretty quick, as she was sitting in her chair eating a howl of oatmeal and milk. That was twenty-four years ago, and now she has a baby girl of her own, seven months old, who is also using Dr. True's Elixir." (Name on request.)

Constipation, headaches, tired feeling, weakness, spots before the eyes, bad breath, sleeplessness, irritability, dizziness, and many other signs of sickness, can be relieved if you take the prescription known as Dr. True's Elixir. The Family Laxative and Worm Expeller. It has done much for sick people, men, women and children, ever since 1851—over 68 years' reputation.

MYSTIC THIRTEEN

By GENEVIEVE ULMAR

Alton Beardslee had arisen to an uncomfortable and inauspicious morning. In the first place he had been routed out of bed at 7 o'clock and called to the telephone, where his broker informed him that Consolidated Central had closed the day before on a steep decline and that they would call for margins by noon if the market opened "groggy."

"With my marriage with Laura Pearson announced for only fifteen days from now, the prospect looks de-cidedly blue," ruminated Beardslee drearly. "Why did I ever get into this juggling stock game?"

His eyes blinked and he tried to baffle an annoying superstitious influence as his glance swept a calendar hanging on the wall.

"Friday and the thirteenth," he muttered defiantly. "As I don't believe in signs or omens-the mischief!"

Stepping on a truant collar button Beardslee joggled, his elbow came up against the mirrored front of his shaving cabinet and in dismay he drew back from a shower of glass.

"I won't get rattled," he insisted doughtily, but he left the house half an hour later in a wretched state of nervousness. His objective point was the office of a friend who might be inclined to assist him.

A black cat was crossing the road. "I'll beat the warning stuff," clared Beardslee. "Come on, kitty. Good for you-squarely in front of me Now then, Fate, do your worst!"

Three squares further on the mock heroic mood of our mentally disturbed hero came to a climax. A derisive expression crossed his face. He walked quarely under a ladder set against a building front, a painter aloft.

"Hi, there!"

Too late Beardslee caught the warning. The painter aloft had dropped his brush. Full of paint it landed on Beardslee's shoulder, made a straight downward dip and slid down one side of him clear to his feet, leaving a smooth, even strip of white the entire length of his body. Beardsiee disdained the fulsome apologies of the knight of the paint pot and turned into a little shop bearing the sign, "Cleaning, Repairing & Dyeing Done Here.

"I'm in a hurry," he announced to an old man in charge. "How soon can you put this suit in presentable

"Half an hour," came the reply, after some mental calculation. "Go to it!" and Beardslee practically disrobed so far as his outer garments were concerned and wrapped himself in a blanket apportioned him, and snuggled down in a chair gloomily He half dozed, with closed eyes, quickly opened, however, as there was a flash and then the sound of an explosion. The interior of the place was filled with smoke and flames and its proprietor, whose operations had somehow ignited the cleaning material he had been using, was making for the street. Beardslee sprang up, rushed thither himself and in his halfdressed condition darted into the hallway of an adjoining office building.

The street became crowded as the fire alarm was sounded. Beardslee gave up his clothes as lost. He turned into an office where a young man sat askance at the Indian-like habit of the intruder.

"What's the address here?" asked Beardslee of the clerk. "Elston building."

"What room number?"

"Thirteen."

"It's the limit!" muttered Beards lee, but he completed the message. Then he sat down to wait. In the course of an hour the envoy from his who might be inclined to help him out financially.

"Left for New York on the Limited an hour ago," was the depressing information he received.

Beardslee shrugged his shoulders resignedly. The fates were certainly against him. He proceeded on his way, determining what he would do: order his broker to close up his deals, stand the loss, call upon Laura, suggest a postponement of the wedding until he got on his feet again, and leave speculation alone for the future. As he neared the office of his broker the latter ran up against him on the street.

"Oh, I say; just the man!" he spoke exuberantly. "I'm bound for the exchange, but I'll go back with you and settle up."

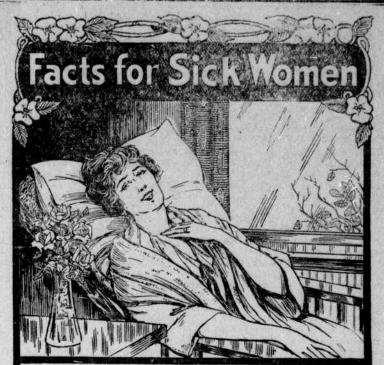

"Settle up?" replied Beardslee, ruefully. "If there's a deficit you'll have to give me a day or two to make good."

"Deficit? Why, man, we thought it best to close out the deal in the face of an alluring profit, and there's thirteen thousand dollars to your credit! What you want to do? Shall we reinvest it for you?"

"Why, no, not right away," stumbled the dazed Beardslee. "Then Central Consolidated went up?"

"First thing the market openedthirteen points in an hour."

"Mirror, black cat, it dder," he soill-oquized, "all vapor. But the money— never to be risked again, that's solid. real, tangible thirteen thousand dollars. Dear little Laura! Ins you and common sense after this

THE PARIAH

By S. B. HACKLEY

(@. 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Lydia Bromley dropped her big corncutter's knife to listen to the coo of a mourning dove in the far side of the cane field. The time of killing frosts was near and Adlai Booth had be sought her to help cut his cane-s man's job, but all the young fellows of the neighborhood were either in France or on the way; besides, she needed the work.

"Oh, little dove-oh, happy little dove" - the woman unconsciously spoke aloud, "wish me happiness, Wish me miles away from these cruel people on the nice, big farm, with cows and pigs and flocks of fowls that would bring in a living that wouldn't keep me tied to the ax, chopping wood all winter, and bound to the hoe, chopping weeds all summer, with all my leisure time being hired man to the neighbors decent enough to hire me! Oh, little dove, if I could, right this minute, I'd run away and play and look for Dutchman's Pipe in the brown leaves in the woods over there!'

Just behind the hedge that bordered the cane field, a lean, brown-faced man stood. Lindsay Temple had come un the little hill path back of Lydia's cottage that sat below on the road, in the midst of the two acres that belonged to it, stopping on his way to town to speak to her about some quilting she'd agreed to do when the outer work was done, for, since his wife's death, four years before, Lindsay had Hved alone and fended for himself.

Listening, Lindsay gazed curiously at her from behind the leafy screen.

Gazed at Her From Behind the Leafy

A hundred times he had seen her, and though her straight erectness, her blue eyes, sparkling with a proud independence, and her clear, pink skin-at fifty, smooth as a girl's-had always appeared to him as pleasantly different from his neighbor women, he saw her now with new vision. Unseen, he went back down the hill to where he had left his buggy.

Six years before, in hope, Lydia had brought her consumptive husband and her young daughter from Vermont. But Park Bromley had died in their third month in Tennessee, and Lydia learned the misery that comes of misunderstanding.

A spring, ice-cold and deep, ran out from under a mighty rock by her front door, and passersby, men and women. often stopped for a drink. And Lydia did not consider it a detriment to her character to talk to the men, easily, pleasantly, of the affairs of the dayeven to invite them, as she did the women, to sit sometimes for a little time on her porch.

But in that section of the country it was not the custom of the women folk to converse much with men, and this innocent sociable practice of Lydia's came under bitterest condemnation. Fanciful tales were cir culated about that "bold Northern woman," and, in the course of time, she found herself ostracized.

And Lydia, become a pariah, hid the hurt in her friendly heart, and met them who ceased to speak in passing, with a proud mien of defiance.

Laura, the daughter, found occupation in a town in another county, and Lydia stayed alone—the only bright spots in her life her love of the outdoors and the occasional visits of her daughter and of the storekeper's wife and daughter, good women, educated and cultivated.

Lindsay, on his slow way to town, wondered what had come over him. He felt strangely young, the mellow autumn air he breathed was like the wind off the blossoming grape in May.

"She ain't any more like the majority of these snuff-dippin' women hereabouts than a thrush is like a mudduck!" he told himself. "These fools down here ain't got wisdom enough to understand she's jest had different and comes from a d. omed place to this. I'm a-gold or I'm a-goin' to-

That evening at dusk, with infinite care not to arouse the woman in the kitchen. Lindsay left a basket of fine Concord grapes and "The Rose Garden Husband," a book he had timt day bought at the drug store. He didn't quite understand the title, but it sounded good, and the clerk had told him it was a pretty love story.

That night, at his five miles' distant home, he sat until midnight, thinking. At last he rose and faced the crayon portrait caricature of the meek spirit who had been the mother of his three daughters. "Sene," he whispered, "you was a good girl and we loved one another; but, oh, Sene, you're gone and I'm lonesome—lonesome as a bear on the mountain."

He rose and went out to the grave under the maples beside the highway. Reaching down one big lean hand he reverently brushed aside the red and vellow leaves that covered the dead grass.

" 'Twouldn't be showin' no disrespect to you, Sene, honey, ef I was to marry again?"-his voice was a pleading apology-"I wanted to tell you, Sene, I'm thinkin' of somebody. Tain't nobody about here, Sene, you ever saw-you needn't worry about it bein' one of these women hereabouts, Sene!'

Each week Lydia found a pleasing parcel on her porch, and she went about her work in happy expectation. One man of all these people was trying to tell her he respected her, admired her, wanted to marry ber!

One evening at dusk, at the end of the fourth week, Lindsay knocked at

"I've been a wantin' to be your beau for a month," he said bashfully, "only was afraid you wouldn't let me be! May I come in and set for a while?"

The humility and the tenderness in his voice brought the tears to her eyes, but her tone was bitter:

"I can't let you-they'd scandalize you!" He flushed through his tan. "It's dark now-nobody'd know-but I'd a come in broad daylight only I couldn't have no stones unjestly cast at you over me!

"I couldn't marry anybody and live about here," she told him at last. "Now Laura's married, I'm going to sell this place Christmas and go away off some

"I were born where I live," Lindsay found himself saying; "It would pull me powerful to give it up."

That night while Lydia wept over this remark, Lindsay knelt in the frost under the maples.

"Oh, Sene, I never 'lowed to sell the place and you air a layin' on it, but Sene, I'd see the spot where you air wouldn't never be neglected. I'd see to it, Sene, dear!"

In a few days Lindsay came to Lydia with news.

"I'm thinkin' of buyin' a place down In Monroe county," he told her, "close to White Rock." She colored with pleasure. "Laura, my girl, lives there!" 'Does she?" he said innocently.

"But your farm here, where you were born?" she breathed

"I'm selling it on condition." She came close to him. "Oh, Lindsay, you are giving it up-because-"Because I'm lovin' you better'n keepin' a parcel of ground. Say you'll marry me, and I'll go home and tell Nick Prosser he may have it, and I'll go tomorrer to White Rock and buy the farm there and set a carpenter to mendin' the house-I can git it habitable by Christmas. Maybe sooner."

The pariah's eyes grew starlikehappiness enveloped her like a golden cloud. "You are the best man in the world. Lindsay Temple!" she cried. Lindsay drew her close in his arms. "No, I ain't-but you air the finest woman, Lydia, darlin'!"

Says Napoleon Detested Tobacco.

In a letter from Mile. Bertrand. daughter of General Bertrand, Napoleon's devoted companion at St. Hele na, Mile. Bertrand maintained that although the emperor was commonly credited with being a snuff-taker, he detested tobacco in any form. "Only once," she wrote, "was Napoleon persuaded to try a pipe. As soon as he placed the amber tube in his mouth he flung it from him with a gesture of disgust and shouted: 'Take the disgusting thing away.'

"To soothe his chronic indigestion the emperor had a mixture of licorice and brown sugar made up, which he carried loose in his waistcoat pockets. He frequently had recourse to this, and when in company would convey a pinch to his nostrils as if it were snuff, but instead of inhaling it he would slide it surreptitiously into his mouth."-Detroit News.

Diet and Longevity.

The subject of diet and its relation to longevity is one of perennial interest, and there is no surer road to fame, or at least to notoriety, than that of promulgating rules of diet and living. Everybody would like to pass the century mark and as many of them as possible, providing his physical vigor and functions could remain unimpaired or nearly so, and even Methuselah's 969 years would scarce ly suffice for a man who would like to taste all experiences, acquire all knowledge, and accomplish all his hopes, dreams and desires. Even then he might be reluctant to shuffle off this mortal coll and enter upon new experiences in the beyond.

"Allie, dear, you look worried." "I am worried, mother."

"Why, what have you to be worried about? You're young and pretty and engaged to John Shuler, the finest young man in the world."

"It's this, mother: John has always moved in the best circles both at his home and at the university, and we have lived so simply here-pinching nickels-that I won't know how to manage the beautiful home he is build-

"You'll learn, dear, and I will tell you everything I know. I had a nice home once."

"Yes, I know, mother, but telling isn't seeing. I lack the practical knowledge of everyday usage. We've mostly eaten out of boxes, we've been

"That's true enough, Allie."

Mrs. Mangan and her daughter were sewing in their tiny living room during this conversation. Two weeks before Alice had finished her first year in college. While there she had met John Shuler and it was a love affair at firsts Alice was working her way through college by being an assistant teacher.

Her mother, left a widow with two little girls when very young, had made a brave fight to educate her children. Alice had been a wonderful help with the housework and sewing, and later with tutoring.

Things were looking much better for them now, as Mrs. Mangan had been offered a position as manager and designer of the dressmaking department in one of the large stores. She was taking a two weeks' rest that she very much needed. She had done dress making for years in the little rooms She had done dresswhere she lived with her daughters and was weary of the drudgery of it. Louise, the younger daughter, was in her sophomore year in high school.

Alice, with her beauty and charm, had won the catch at the university. John Shuler's parents had come from a neighboring state for the graduation of their son, and Mrs. Mangan and Louise had managed to scrape together enough money to go and meet Allie's intended husband and his family. Everything had been so pleasant. Life looked very bright for them all-and now Allie was worried. Alice put down her sewing, grimly determined. "Mother, I have a plan and I hope you won't hinder me. is this: You know the charming Mrs. Fred Merton who lives in that pretty house on the corner of Eighth and Pleasant streets?"

"Yes, dear." "She needs a maid and I have decided to ask for the place. Now wait until I tell you my plan. I can work for her for two months before my wedding. John isn't coming here until then. That will give me some real money for my trousseau, and you can have my things made in your shop. I can learn how things should be done. The house is about the size of the one I am to live in in Oxbridge, and she keeps one maid and has a laundress come in. Just exactly as John and I planned for ourselves

"But-wouldn't John and his famlly be horrified at your working as a servant?"

"They will never know," declared Alice. "I shall give another name. I um used to work and I shall ask questions and learn a lot. You know, Mrs Merton belongs to one of the best famllies and always does the proper thing."

"If it were any one else, dear," said the mother, "I would think it a good plan; but I hate to think of you doing a servant's work."

"It is the kind of work that thousands of women do in their own homes. Besides, I wouldn't be a servant: I would only take the place of one for a few weeks, and I need the money as well as the knowledge. Oxbridge, John's home town, being a small place, goes in hard for society-parties all the time, and they dress more there than in a larger place,

"I hate to go to John with a miserable wardrobe. He wouldn't care-the dear-but for his sake I want some clothes and some social knowledge. I can learn more in the short time I shall be at Mrs. Merton's than in years later-besides, I shall be saved the embarrassment of making mistakes."

"Oh, dear!" said Mrs. Mangan, looking bewildered.

"Be a sport, mother, and we'll enjoy this secret together. We've lived so secluded here in these little upstairs rooms that no one pays any attention to us. Mrs. Merton has never seen me, although, being so popular, I have seen her and heard a lot about her, too, Please, mother."

"Very well, Allie. I am almost en-

"I shall go at once and apply for the place," said Alice as she pinned on her

Alice came back beaming with enthusiasm. "I start tomorrow and Mrs. Merten is a dear. I told her I was inexperienced except in plain cooking. She will show me everything for a week. Then I will know the routine."

Alice returned every evening and told her mother and Louise of what she had gained in knowledge. She kept a notebook "Just think," said she, "I didn't know how a table should be set; nor where to seat the guest of honor, and these are important things to know. I am taking down the names of the kinds of china the Mertons have.

"Then, too, Mrs. Merton is chairman of the art department in the woman's club, and she told me a lot of things that they study. For instance: know, now, that I know nothing about pictures and I know John doesn't; so we won't have any pictures in our house until we learn something about them."

"You have the rest of your lives to select pictures," said Mrs. Mangan, "so I think you are wise there."

"Mrs. Merton is going to borrow some of the papers that members of the class have written and let me read them. Then I have access to all her art books. My notebook is nearly full now and I have been there only five weeks."

"And your clothes are going to be lovely," said Mrs. Mangan, happily. "I think you're the cleverest thing,

Allie," exclaimed Louise. "And I am not working any harder than if I were home. I have there money for clothes and all this housekeeping knowledge besides. Then ,too, I shall know how to manage a maidknow how she should dress, wait on table and answer the door. I feel equal to my beautiful home now."

The 5th of September and Alice's wedding day arrived. John came with his parents and met the bride with Louise, the bridesmaid, and their mother at the church. There was a beautiful though simple wedding and no reception afterward.

The bride in going-away gown and hat left with her husband for the mountains immediately after the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Shuler left at the same time for Oxbridge. It had been a perfect day!

That same evening Louise remarked to her mother: "I shouldn't be surprised if Allie made John governor of the state some day."

"I should be more surprised if she didn't," calmly replied the mother.

Women Writers' Advantage.

The weman writer was comparing men and women authors. "We women have an advantage over the male writers," she said. "Because if the muse refuses to be wooed we can indifferently turn to knitting a sock or trimming a hat, which is the surest way to bring the muse to terms. every day at exactly the same time. He says that sometimes he will spend most of that time staring at a sheet of paper with not an idea in his head. Now, I think that is a wicked waste of time, and the muse is probably giggling at him.

"When my time for writing comesand I try to set apart a certain period of every day-if no ideas come I just seize my stocking hag and darn up a few holes, or I cut out a pretty dress for my kiddie, or I knit 20 rows. And then the ideas begin to tush into my head thick and fast. Yes, we women certainly know how to handle the muse better than the men folk-for we know that nothing will get her attention quicker than indifference and neglect."-Springfield Union.

False Economy in Words.

The insistent call for economy should not apply to the use of words. according to Lady Helen Munro Ferguson, wife of the Governor-Ceneral of Australia, who has been warning the students of the Presbyterian Ladies college in New South Walesnot to make one word take the place of half a dozen others. "If you fall in the attempt to do something, you may perhaps say it is 'rotten,' when you only mean that it is tiresome; or, perhaps, some person may be just 'decent' when all the time you mean she is kind," remarked Lady Helen. And she added that the use of one word on occasions where it had no proper place would simply give the hearer a depressing idea of the capacity of the speaker, "Read good literature, learn good poetry, do things in the best way possible," was the kindly advice which accompanied the lecture on slang.

early in the summer. About fifty friends and neighbors of F. L. Mason and wife gave Mr. Mason a birthday surprise party, March 6. A most enjoyable evening was spent. One of the most pleasing social events of the season was the party given by Mrs. Chase Barker and Mrs. P. T. Moore, Feb. 27. In spite of bad traveling, seventy were present. The program included a victrola concert, piano duet by Mrs. E. L. Linscott and Mrs. N. F. Twin-ing, solo, Rev. R. M. Trafton, vocal trio, Mrs. E. L. Osgood, Mrs. Barker and Miss Ethel Stover and readings by W. H. Osgood and Mrs. Florence Merrill.

The Once-in-a-while club met The Check the Congregational parsonage and had a most enjoyable time. Miss Holt gave an interesting center, a most interesting experimental among the mountain whites. Mrs Eliza Herrick and Mrs. Andrew Moor served delicious refreshments. Quite a substantial sum is being raised to end to Rev. Joseph Beach for relief work in Armenia. The money be sent soon, so all who would like to help should hand the money to Mrs. Herrick as soon as possible.

The steamship Republic, an American liner, was rammed and sunk by the steamship Florida, near Nantucket lightship on January 23, 1909. The Marconi operator, Jack Binns, sent out the "C. Q. D.," the code signal then used in calling for aid, and several steamships quickly answered and steamed to the spot. They saved 761 persons. This was the first use of wireless to save lives of passengers on an ocean liner. By a strange co incidence this event happened on the eve of the seventy-first anniversary of the day on which Samuel Morse first publicly exhibited and demonstrated his code of "dots and dashes" now known as the Morse alphabet. exhibition took place at the New York university on January 24, 1838.

English Judges' Robes.

There is as much difference in the gowns worn by British legal lights as there is in their wigs. The robes of a high court judge are gorgeous and imposing. They are made of rich silk and trimmed with ermine. Then, too, high court judges carry, but never wear, three-cornered hats. Judges who preside over lower courts wear much less gorgeous robes, and do not carry three-cornered hats. A barrister's gown is made of black alpaca or some similar material known as "stuff" in the legal profession. It is only when a barrister has become a K. C. that he may don a gown of silk. For this reason a king's counsel is often referred to as a "silk."
