MOTTO:—HELPFUL AND HOPEFUL.

The purpose of this column are succinctly stated in the title and motto—it is for the mutual benefit, and aims to be helpful and hopeful. Being for the common good it is for the common use—a public servant, a purveyor of information and suggestions, a medium for the interchange of ideas, in this capacity it solicits communications, and its success depends largely on the support given it in this respect. Communications must be signed, but the name of writer will not be printed except by permission. Communications will be subject to approval or rejection by the editor of the column, but none will be rejected without good reason. Address all communications to The American, Ellsworth, Me.

THE OTHER FELLOW'S JOB.

There's a craze among us mortals that is cruel hard to name. Whosoever you find a human you will find the case the same; You may seek among the worst of men or seek among the best. And you'll find that every person is precisely like the rest: Each believes his real calling is along some other line Than the one at which he's working—take, for instance, yours and mine. From the meanest "me-too" creature to the leader of the mob, There's a universal craving for the other fellow's job. There are millions of positions in the busy world to-day. Each a drudge to him that holds it, but to him that doesn't play; Every farmer's broken-hearted that in youth he missed his call. While that same unhappy farmer is the envy of us all. Any task you care to mention seems a vastly better lot Than the one especial something which you happen to have got. There's but one sure way to smother Envy's heartache and her sob: Keep too busy at your own to want the other fellow's job.

—Strickland W. Gillian.
—Sent by "Law."

East Holden, April 20.

Dear M. B.'s:—

On this fine morning when a dozen things wait for me, I am going to write a few lines. Is it not a great pleasure to be able to look out and not see a snow-drift?

Well, Esther, when I read your letter proclaiming yourself a "slacker," I said, "here is another." Really, I think Aunt Madge ought to have a gold medal for being so patient with us all, but I spend most of my time in the dough-pan. At present my family numbers seven, and I have five dinners to put up and five children to get ready for school each morning, so cooking and the "dear dishes" take most of my time. Have not seen Aunt Maria this winter, but I do see Uncle Mark go by on his way to town.

I think "Betsy Prig" ought to write and tell us how she likes her new home. And Grandma Dis Able promised to write if I would, so perhaps I have helped some. And, Grandma, please send your letter in after you write it.

I have not time for more this morning, so I will enclose a clipping of good advice, and wish you all good morning.

"Law,"

The sentiment of your clipping, if lived up to, would bring contentment into a good many lives and banish an equal amount of envy.

Dear Aunt Madge and Sisters:—

I have not done much work this winter. Made twenty holders, more or less, and distributed them among my relatives and friends, and then I brought down a rug that I put in a frame three years ago, marked out a border of scroll-work, and hooked it. Some call it "drawing," but I call it "hooking," as it was done with a hook, Don't know when I shall get it finished.

Now I am going to ask you a serious question. Why not open the gate and invite your Johns into the fold; that is, if they want to come? But if they sulk or balk, give them a loving pat and say: "Now, dear," (be sure and say DEAR) "if you will help Aunt Madge through this everlasting, back-breaking drudge (I hope these are not swear words) month of house-cleaning, next November, when you have to vote for the next President, we will vote just as you do—if they will let us." That will make things all right and O. K.

Now I will go on another tack, to use a nautical phrase. My eldest son is now sixty-four years old. He says the first book he ever read was Sargent's Primer, or First Reader. Then came Second, Third, Fourth and Fifth Readers. Who of our older readers does not remember the poems of "Little Fhebe, the Blackberry Girl," and "The Three Little Graves"? There were Progressive Readers, and Saunders'. When I left school at the age of sixteen, we were using the National Reader. (I have one of those, Sadie.) Who of you remember the old speller with the alphabet large and small? It was probably from it I learned my letters. In it there was an illustration of a big apple tree with a boy in it. An old man standing under it was coaxing the boy to come down, but the boy only laughed at him. Then the man threw some turf at the boy, but that did no good. The young saucy boy said he would not come down, but when the man said, "I will try what virtue there is in stones," the young scamp was glad to come down and beg the old man's pardon.

"Sadie."

"Sadie's" letter will be continued next week. Here the interchurch article by Prof. McFarland will be continued. Several have spoken of getting information from his writings on the subject.

Business is not being done now as it used to be; for business, one of the fundamental factors of civilization, has been reorganized. The first railroad in the country ran from New York city to Buffalo, and had eleven lines between those two places, on which you had to buy eleven different tickets from as many different companies. Now you go on the New York Central on one ticket and one line. I do not offer that as an illustration of the way different bodies of Christians should merge; for this interchurch movement is not to unite different churches but to eliminate waste where there is waste and close up desert places where there are desert places. It is not designed to effect ecclesiastical union at all, but its aim is to induce churches to co-operate in a common purpose for a greater result than they can achieve alone.

The movement proposes to use allied strategy. When the armies of France, England and Italy were fighting Germany on independent lines, under separate commands and without much cohesion of plan, they made little progress, and were facing defeat when the United States entered the war. On the other hand, the High Command was directing the operations of the central powers and dealing united and telling blows. Just as soon as the allies put Poch in command as generalissimo, and the American troops went into action as a separate unit under his command, the tide of battle turned. This movement does not intend to break up denominations and make one new sect, but to persuade them to adopt the policy of the allied army when it faced the Huns. Get together and really do the things that you can do only in part separately.

Byard of Haverhill, Mass., was present, and as she and her husband toured through the West about a year and a half ago, she entertained the ladies with a full description of the western country. Photos added to the interest of her talk. Refreshments were served.

On Sunday, April 18, Rev. Alfred Kallman preached his farewell sermon at the Baptist church. After the sermon there was a communion service. In the evening the ordinance of baptism was conferred upon two candidates. Wednesday evening the people met at the chapel for a farewell reception to Mr. Kallman and his family. A pleasant evening was spent. Refreshments were served. The following lines were read by Mrs. Lillian Robbins:

TO MR. AND MRS. KALLMAN:

Ten months ago, in summers ruddy glow,

We bade you welcome to each heart and home—
You and the little ones God had sent Down to the little ones from heaven's starry dome,
Ten months for you you have labored,
Happy to serve us all,
And never once have faltered.
Whenever on you we would call,
But now the bond must be severed,
And we must bid adieu,
And pray that wherever you journey,
God's blessing will go with you,
God speed you on your journey
As you go to another home,
Our love and prayers will go with you
Wherever you may roam.
Our hearts are sad at the parting,
Yet we say "God's will be done,"
And we pray that sometime we'll meet you
Where partings never come.
So, dear Mr. and Mrs. Kallman,
With sad heart and tear-dimmed eye,
We each will press your hand and say:
"God speed," but not good-bye."

IF MOTHERS ONLY KNEW

Thousands of Children Suffer from Worms and Their Mothers Do Not Know What the Trouble is.

Signs of worms are: Constipation, sour stomach, deranged stomach, swollen upper lip, offensive breath, hard and full belly with occasional gripings and pains about the navel, pale face of leaden tint, eyes heavy and dull, twitching eyelids, itching of the nose, itching of the rectum, short dry cough, grinding of the teeth, little red points sticking out on the tongue, starting during sleep, slow fever.

Mrs. H. N. Roberts, 502 Asylum street, Ellsworth, used Dr. True's Elixir for her little baby girl when she was sick. Mrs. Roberts wrote to Dr. J. F. True & Co.: "My little girl is cured of her worms." And in a later letter wrote: "Baby is fine and I think it was your medicine (Dr. True's Elixir, The Family Laxative and Worm Expeller) that helped her." If your child is ill start giving Dr. True's at once. Buy Dr. True's Elixir at your dealers at once. Three sizes.

AFTER FOUR YEARS

This Testimony Remains Unshaken. Time is the best test of truth. Here is an Ellsworth Falls story that has stood the test of time. It is a story with a point which will come straight home to many of us.

H. W. Hamilton, Mill St., Ellsworth Falls, Me., says: "I have been troubled with my back and kidney complaint for some time. A friend recommended Doan's Kidney Pills to me and I got a box and after taking them I was very much benefited. I am willing to recommend Doan's to anyone who has such trouble as they have helped me to a great extent."

Nearly five years later, Mr. Hamilton said: "What I have said in the statement I gave some years ago regarding the merit of Doan's Kidney Pills holds good in every particular. This medicine relieved me of an annoying kidney weakness and a lame back. I am pleased to endorse Doan's again."

LOVE'S CURRICULUM.

By EVELYN LEE.
(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union.)

"You are sure you are in love with Wanda Muir?" propounded Lester North.

"Well, I can't think of anything else day or night," submitted Archie Duntley.

"That's a sign."

"And I'm not eating much."

"Oh, you've got it! Assuming that this is so, why don't you press your suit, propose and settle the question that is troubling you so?"

"Oh, I don't dare!" almost breathlessly and awed replied timid, retiring and inexperienced Archie. "She is like some beautiful flower or bird. I might scare her with my crude ways. No, no. I want to know the conventional methods of appraising her of my feelings."

"Very good," smiled North. "I'm just the right one to come to for advice. Just put a friend in the way of getting a bride. I loaned him a book—I call it the Curriculum of Love. He just returned it. Here it is, in my pocket. Now then, you post up on courtship' out of that and orally and in writing you'll be able to win your bride."

Wanda Muir was visiting a girl friend, her home being in another town. Archie came upon her strolling along the river shore. They rested in the shade. A view of that charming face, the luxury of proximity to the object of his adventure at once put to flight the "Curriculum" and all the set speeches Archie had acquired.

It was all done in a moment. His hand involuntarily sought that of Wanda. He simply faltered forth: "I love you." Wanda flushed and tremored, hid her head on his shoulder and a wedding followed in four months.

Never was there a more happy or contented couple.

It was half a year after they had settled down in a prettily furnished flat that Wanda started in at housecleaning, as she termed it. It was more an overhauling than a renovation process, for she was a neat housekeeper. Archie came home one evening to find everything in order, but Wanda in an unmistakably disturbed frame of mind.

"I would like to go home to mother for a few days," she submitted, and Archie noted that she was unusually depressed. He expressed concern, almost alarm.

"You're not ill, Wanda?" he inquired solicitously.

"Oh, no, only tired," she responded in a wearisome way.

"You have just worn you dear self out with this housecleaning," declared Archie. "I shall never let you overdo yourself that way again—never. Why! there are actually tears in your eyes," and pathetically he kissed them away. "You must take a rest and have a change of scene. Tell mother everything, wont, you, dear? and if she thinks a trip South will build you up, we'll start at once."

Archie saw her to the train the following morning, so kind and considerate, that while Wanda acted as if she had something on her mind she had not told him about, she could not help but cling to him and appreciate his thoughtfulness. Archie sent a box of his favorite cigars to father and a pretty little remembrance to mother. Then he went home, counting the hours until Wanda should return.

It was the third morning after that and Archie was just about to leave the house for his office, when the servant announced a caller. Archie entered the reception room to be confronted by his wife's father.

"No bad news, I hope?" he inquired, all in a flutter and drawing back in wonderment from the withheld hand and stern face of Mr. Muir.

"I don't imagine it would disturb you much if there was," growled the latter, "Duntley, you're a villain!"

"What's that? Have you lost your mind?"

"No," retorted Mr. Muir, "I have the proofs of your perfidy. You have broken poor Wanda's heart, that is all. She came across some letters to your former love flames in your desk in renovating things, and she hasn't known a moment of peace and comfort since. There they are. What explanation have you to make?"

Archie viewed the extended letters with distended eyes. Then he sprang to his feet and waved them jubilantly in the air.

"Glory!" he shouted. "That's all, is it? Why, I thought something serious had happened!"

"Serious! Do you deny your hand, writing?"

"Not at all."

"You have the unblushing effrontery to acknowledge that those letters to your 'Darling Sue' and 'Beloved Gladys' are genuine?"

"That I wrote them, or rather, copied them? Sure! Oh, you suspicious old dear! and oh! poor, innocent Wanda! Why, man, they are copies I made from the 'Curriculum of Love,' practicing to write to Wanda to win her, but it came about that she was just waiting to love me and I wasted my time in posting up on correspondence," and volubly Archie recited the details of his following the advice of Lester North and Mr. Muir comprehended and believed.

"When are you going back to Wilton?" inquired Archie.

"The next train, to release the anxiety of poor, silly Wanda."

"I'll go with you to help," gloated Archie, "and say! we'll have a regular happy family reunion!"

West Franklin.
The demolishing of the Macomber store last week marks the passing of a building in which probably more goods have been sold than any other in town. It was built by Henry Macomber in the early sixties, and was run in connection with his mill at East Franklin. Henry Macomber was a "live wire." His mill was the largest in this vicinity, and the most modern and up-to-date one between Bangor and Calais. Enormous quantities of box shooks were made and shipped to the West Indies, and long lumber, laths and clapboards to Boston and New York. He had a shipyard where he built vessels to carry his lumber, and which brought back cargoes of corn, flour and other goods. One hundred men and thirty or forty teams composed the usual force, and sometimes this was largely increased. A disastrous fire on his timber lands in township 10 in the early eighties put a stop to this business, the mill was gradually dismantled and the store closed. Later it was occupied by Morrison, Clough & Co., Frank Bradbury, T. M. Blaisdell, and S. S. Scammon was there a few years before moving into his new store.

WRIGLEY'S

The largest electric sign in the world advertises on Times Square, New York City: it is 250 feet long, 70 feet high. Made up of 17,286 electric lamps.

The fountains play, the trade mark changes, reading alternately WRIGLEY'S SPEARMINT, DOUBLEMINT, and JUICY FRUIT, and the Spearmen "do a turn."

This sign is seen nightly by about 500,000 people from all over the world.

UNITED COUPONS

How much should I give to make this a better world?

A CERTAIN man in New York filled out his income tax report.

It showed an income so large that his tax was 53%. And his total gifts to church and charity for the year were $148.

Think of it—thousands spent for luxuries and pleasure for himself; and $148 to leave the world a little better than he found it!

Most of us do better than that; but not so very much better.

Our average daily gift for all church causes is

- less than we spend on daily papers
- less than a local telephone call
- less than a third of the day's car fare
- less than 3 cents a day

No wonder that 80% of the ministers of America are paid less than $20 a week. No wonder that the church hospitals turn away thousands of sick people a year. No wonder that China has only one doctor for every 400,000 people. No wonder that every church board and charity society is forever meeting deficits, forever passing the hat.

It isn't because we are selfish; it isn't because we don't want to help. It's just because no one has ever put up a great big program to us, and asked us to think of the work of the church in a systematic businesslike way.

The Interchurch World Movement represents the united program of thirty denominations. They have surveyed their whole task, no business could have done it better.

They have budgeted their needs; no business could have a more scientific budget. They have united to prevent the possibility of waste and duplication. At least a million dollars will be saved by the fact that thirty individual campaigns are joined in one united effort.

And they come to the men or women who love America—to you—this week asking you to use them as the channel through which a certain definite part of your income can be applied to make this a better world.

Only you can determine what part of your income that should be.

It's a good time right now to answer that question. We're passing through the world just once; how much better will the world be because you passed through?

Humidity.

Humidity is the moisture or aqueous vapor in the atmosphere. The vapor is really an invisible gas. When this vapor becomes visible it is called dew, fog, mist, haze, clouds, rain, snow, hail, etc., according to the size of the drops of water or the method by which the vapor condenses.

A given space at a definite temperature can contain only a given amount of moisture. When a given space contains all of the moisture it is capable of holding it is said to be saturated.

The percentage of moisture in the air to what it would hold if saturated is called the relative humidity. When the air is saturated with moisture the humidity would be 100 per cent.

MRS. TUBBS DOES HER BIT.

Play to be Presented Friday Evening by Junior Class.

Friday evening at Hancock hall, the junior class of the Ellsworth high school, under the direction of Fred E. Cooke, will present the play, "Mrs. Tubbs Does Her Bit."

The cast of characters is as follows: Mrs. Tubbs... Mrs. George Austin... Mrs. Serepty McDougall... Addie Carlisle... Miss Clingie Vine... Sylvia Grindal... Mrs. Ellen Hickey... Rachel Haynes... Elsie West... Charlotte Sawyer... Queenie Tubbs... Marcia Willey... James Scotland Tubbs... John Whitcomb... Simon Rubles... Luman Woodruff... Major John Pepper... Morton Whitcomb... Nelson Redd... Hollis Higgins... Tim Graham... James Carney... Scuffles Tubbs... Albert Davis

The story of the play is as follows: Mrs. Tubbs is a smiling lady of unconquerable optimism who "never lifts her umbrella until it begins to rain." She is a widow, living with her five children in Shantytown, manages for a precarious living by taking in washing, and, assisted by the ingenuity of her son James, has kept the family together. But the boys are splitting for the great war and James' heart is filled with a longing to go to his country. Just when the clouds seem darkest, the silver lining appears in the guise of Aunt Selena McDougall, a wealthy relative, who agrees to take care of the family while James does his bit at the front.

The second act occurs some six weeks later. James is now a private in the training camp near the city. He has just married Elsie West the pretty little Red Cross nurse, and the wedding festivities are broken up by the arrival of Private Redd, who orders him back to camp with the information that spies have been seen at camp and all men on leave are ordered in.

Elsie, the little bride, is injured by a motor truck and is taken to the hospital late at night. Mrs. Tubbs leaves her home to get to the training camp and tell James about Elsie's accident. She arrives at midnight at the camp and finds James on sentry duty. Elsie is calling her husband, and Mrs. Tubbs tells him he must go to his wife. James cannot leave his post of duty at midnight, but Mrs. Tubbs insists and takes his place as sentry.

Major Pepper, an old admirer of Mrs. Tubbs, finds her acting as sentry, but not recognizing her thinks she is a spy and orders her sent to the guard-house. The complications are straightened out the next morning at the home of Mrs. Tubbs, and the old-time romance between our heroine and the Major is revived.

Comedy scenes are introduced during the action of the play by Miss Clingie Vine, a romantic old maid, Scuffles, a lazy boy, and Queenie, a mischievous little girl.

BRIGHTER DAYS.

By T. B. ALDERSON. (Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union.)

"A pound of nails, tenpennys, sir?" Inquired the hardware man at Acton. "No," came the voluble response. "The biggest you've got; spikes, if you like!"

The storekeeper had never seen much of his present customer, Alan Duryea. He had heard of him, however, as a man of some note in the literary field with a very liberal income. A year back he had purchased an old, but fine mansion, next to another of his kind. These had belonged to two brothers who had lost their fortunes. The one Duryea had purchased was surrounded by a great stone wall, with a gate in that part of it along the next lot. There Duryea had lived through the winter, having little to do with the people of the village.

There was no mystery to his life. He was young and rather good looking, but he had won his way in the world through hard work and at the cost of numerous sacrifices to comfort and enjoyment. He was not soured, although very irritable at times, and had gone into seclusion because he fancied that all by himself he could better think and write. He had been disappointed in the results, and now there arose a new and unexpected source of irritability. The big house next to his own was being renovated, and Duryea learned that it was to be occupied as an orphanage of a country church organization.

One day a dozen or more noisy children flocked into the newly renovated house. They were under the charge of two matrons who did not seek to curb their playfulness, and the incessant babel of juvenile boisterousness became a decided affliction to Duryea. The next day he discovered that some one had pushed open the gate that connected the two residences. Hence the nails and hammer.

For over half a year Duryea had been gathering material and making exhaustive notes along a line of interest and likely to be of great profit to him. He now removed manuscript and memoranda to a room on the other side of the house to evade being near the disturbing element. He continued, however, to use the library overlooking the next lot, when he was not at work. He was seated there one morning when he glanced out of the window as an unusual commotion awoke the echoes.

A new figure had appeared upon the scene. It was that of a young lady who was led by the two nurses among the group of children. She wore a bandage across her eyes and groped like a blind person with her arms. But there was the poetry of beauty, of perfect grace in her every movement and a radiant flush and smile upon her face expressed the deepest tenderness and love for the adoring throng about her. They called her name—"Our Darling Mercy!" They kissed her hands and clung to her dress, and amid the babel Duryea discerned that she was their former teacher, who had returned after an absence of a month seeking to overcome fast-approaching sightlessness.

Duryea was infinitely touched at the sight of such helpless loveliness, a winner of hearts, even in her great affliction. He went to his room on the other side of the house, but could not get down to work; finally flung his cigar into the waste basket and returned to the library. The children, however, had gone in to their studies. Duryea dozed in his chair. A crash awoke him. The little ones in the next yard were out at play again and some one had flung a ball. It had gone through a window, arousing Duryea, who observed a taint of smoke in the air. He forgot his momentary anger at the accident, hurried from the room and traced the smoke across a hall and into his new writing apartment.

"Just in time!" exclaimed Duryea, as he caught up the blazing waste basket, hurried it through the window and extinguished some papers on the desk, the edges of which had ignited. "If that ball had not aroused me, where would my work of months be now?" He felt a trifle more kindly toward his unconscious young tormentors, and as a physician whom he knew, later came out of the house next door, Duryea, at the gate of his own home, halted him.

Dr. Warden told him of Miss Mercy Paxton, whose sweet attractiveness had remained a pleasing memory in Duryea's mind.

"We fear for her eyes," pronounced the physician, "and are doing the best we can for her. She should have a specialist, but the treasury of the home is depleted." "Come in," insisted Duryea. "I want to talk with you." And what he had to say was under pledge of secrecy that he would furnish the money to care for the afflicted young lady.

And the next morning at daylight, Alan Duryea went into the garden, drew out the nails that held the partition gate and left it open for all the little wanderers who chose to roam over his beautiful garden.

His somber nature had changed under the influence of the sweet, patient sufferer, and he realized that in taking away the barrier he had opened the gate to love. For a little later, her affliction removed, Mercy Paxton, amid the moonlight beauties of the lovely garden, became his promised bride.

Source of Bristles. By far the greatest source of supply of bristles is the hog. China supplies more than any other country, and is followed by Russia, Germany, France and Belgium. Smaller and finer artists' brushes, etc., are made from the hair of other animals, such as the badger, goat, camel and sable. The better quality of bristles is obtained from pigs and wild boars inhabiting cold countries; the thinner the hog, the longer and stiffer the bristles. Before being made into brushes, the bristles must be carefully cleaned and sorted, and most of the operations of brush manufacture are now performed by machinery. The industry is carried on in various parts of this country.

Brewing Tea in Tibet. It is in Tibet that the art of making tea is really understood. To begin with, the tea comes in bricks, fetched by caravan from China. Mixed with the tea leaves are usually a few small twigs, which help to prove that it is genuine stuff. A piece is broken from a brick, ground to fine powder in a mortar and boiled in water for five minutes, a little salt is added, says the Kansas City Star. The fluid then is poured through a bamboo strainer into a wooden churn. A piece of butter and some parched barley meal are contributed, and the mixture is churned for a minute or so. The tea now is poured into a tenpot and is ready to be drunk. Each partaker draws from the bosom of his own a wooden bowl to serve as a cup.

BY FREIGHT.

By ALISON DRURY.

"Freight carried at passenger speed," was the advertised slogan of the Dayton & Circle railroad. A single track line traversing fifty miles once a day, its one locomotive, two gondolas and three box cars swung around the belt circle taking in twelve small towns.

The D. & C. was a private enterprise owned by wealthy business men, its functions simple, its profits pretentious. The train was manned by the engine crew only.

Aleck Pearce, an estimable young man at Brompton, was in charge of the one small freight house. He had gone away on a vacation and a visiting cousin, Rodney Walton, had temporarily taken his place. The latter was a young man of fortune and leisure and rather enjoyed the novelty of real work. He looked around from his desk as footsteps echoed. Then he turned around, for a sweet-faced, bright-eyed girl of eighteen confronted him with an eager, excited face.

"Please, I wish to go to Fairville," she spoke.

"On the Circle? Hardly," replied Rodney, "you see, under our charter we are not allowed to take passengers. There is the Central."

"Yes, I know, but I missed the ten o'clock train by three minutes and there isn't another until five. And I must be at Fairville by three, for I am to be bridesmaid to my dearest friend. Can't you take me, please? And stow me away in any odd corner."

Rodney Walton shook his head in negative.

"You see, Miss, I am only acting as a substitute and have to obey orders. Hold on," added Rodney quickly, and he took down a book. "No passengers, but—live stocks. Let us see. Ah! here it is, we take on—pigs, he was going to say, but substituted 'lambs, yes, little lambs.'"

"Then why not I?"

"But they have to be crated."

"Then—then crate me," courageously suggested Ada Morton. "Oh, I must not be late at the wedding."

"You would have to ride in a dusty, rattling freight car," Rodney advised her. "And you would have to be weighed and tagged, just like a piece of freight—impossible, young lady!"

But Ada Morton was all the more determined. Rodney took a cardboard form from a pigeon hole. "I would have to write your name and destination," he declared, "and tie it to your arm and schedule you as live stock at so much a pound."

"But I don't care, if you'll get me to Fairville and dear, waiting Elinor Wayne!"

The unique situation caused Rodney to smile. He went into a lumber room and came dragging thence a light framework that had held a piano lamp. He carried this outside and thrust it into the half loaded box car.

When, five minutes later, he helped Miss Morton into the car, he had placed a stool inside the upright crate, had tied a freight ticket to her arm and loosely tacked a thin piece of lathing across the frame.

"Not very luxurious," he commented. "Oh, it's just delightful!" declared Ada. "You dear, good man! And the novelty of it!"

He left the car door partly opened, seated himself on a box, a small satchel between his feet, and rather congratulated himself for providing so acceptably for the darling wishes of this captivating young lady, who beamed with grateful smiles.

The train did not halt until it had progressed over fifteen miles. It came to an abrupt halt and Rodney went to the door and looked out.

"Something out of order with the engine," he explained. "I'll go ahead and find out what the trouble is. Please keep your eye on this, will you?" and he moved the little satchel near to Ada.

Five minutes had elapsed, when Ada bent forward, fixing her eyes upon two men emerging from some bushes. They conversed, exchanged revolvers and one of them ran to the car:

"Hello!" he ejaculated, staring wonderingly, "who are you?"

"I'm freight, please," announced Ada. Just then the locomotive whistled. Rodney appeared.

"Hands up?" ordered the intruder. Now then, you produce the cash you are taking for the bank to Fairville.

"Where is it?" coolly submitted Rodney. "The Central does that by express."

"Well, we've got a tip you're doing it today. Satchel—twenty thousand dollars. Come, produce!"

"Search for yourself, if you're so sure it's here," and in wonderment Rodney observed that the satchel had disappeared. The other ransacked among the boxes. Ada had arisen, her hands clasped in real or assumed terror. The train started up. The baffled road agent leaped outside muttering, "I fancy we got a wrong steer."

"Was there twenty thousand dollars in the satchel?" asked Ada. "Yes, but where is it?"

SIX MONTHS I COULD NOT WORK

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made Me Strong and Able to Work—I Recommend It To All My Friends.

Bayonne, N. J.—"I had pains in back and legs so that I could not stand caused by female trouble. I felt so tired all the time, had bad headaches, and for six months I could not work. I was treated by a physician and took other remedies but got no relief. A friend told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has helped me very much. I am well and strong and now able to do my work. I cannot thank you enough and I recommend your medicine to my friends who are sick."—Mrs. SUSIE SACATANSKY, 25 East 17th St., Bayonne, N. J.

It must be admitted by every fair-minded, intelligent person, that a medicine could not live and grow in popularity for over forty years, and today hold a record for such wonderful success as does Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, without possessing great virtue and actual worth. Such medicines must be looked upon and termed both standard and dependable by every thinking person.

FRIENDS HARDLY KNEW MRS. BISHOP

Amazes Neighbors by Recovery—Gains Forty Pounds by Taking Tanlac

"I have gained in weight and improved so much since taking Tanlac that my friends hardly knew me at first sight," was the remarkable statement made recently by Mrs. Dell Bishop of 155 York St., Portland, Maine.

"For the past three years my suffering was so intense that I had fallen off until I was scarcely more than a shadow of my former self," Mrs. Bishop continued. "My appetite was poor and some days I could hardly eat a thing. My digestion was so bad that the little I did manage to eat disagreed with me. I had such dreadful headaches I thought they would run me wild. I was so nervous that it was almost impossible for me to get a good night's sleep or rest. I felt tired all the time and many a day I gave completely out and had to stop and lie down to rest."

"My sister had been taking Tanlac and when I saw what it did for her I decided to try it, too. I began to improve right from the start and now since I have taken five bottles I really feel like a new woman. I have been built up so wonderfully that I have actually gained forty pounds in weight. My friends and neighbors are simply amazed at my recovery and every day someone is complimenting me on how well and strong I am looking. My appetite is just fine and everything I eat agrees with me just perfectly. I am not one bit nervous and I sleep as soundly as can be all night long. I don't know what it is to be troubled with a headache any more. I feel better and stronger than I have in years and can hardly realize myself the change that has come over me. I am so grateful to Tanlac that I don't believe I will ever be able to praise it enough."

Tanlac is sold in Ellsworth by E. G. Moore, in Sullivan by Dunbar Bros., and by the leading druggists in every town.—Advt.

"Bake with Royal and be Sure"

TWO OF A KIND.

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD.

Stuart Bruce lay stretched out on the pine needles which carpeted the little grove adjacent to the farm house. Presently, he would rise and hunt out his fellow boarder, Miss Sherwood, and challenge her to a game of tennis. For the time being, it was cooler to lie and meditate. His thoughts flowed through devious channels, ending up where they had always ended of late—what and what was Evelyn Sherwood?

He had first met her across the snowy clothed table widely and accurately advertised as being freshly served from its own farm, with the thickest of cream, most newly laid of eggs and vegetables which were the last word in succulence. Among the other guests, the quiet thoroughbred woman with her cool impersonal little nod, sweetened by the warm depths of her dark lashed eyes, had stood out like a Richmond rose in a bed of dahlias.

Their acquaintance did not go beyond the "Please-pass-the-sugar" stage until one afternoon when the canoe in which Miss Sherwood had been idly drifting on the water-lilled pond had become involved in a snag and capsized. Stuart had pushed off in a row-boat in frantic haste. She had kept afloat, however, and was attempting to right the canoe when he came up. But she had undoubtedly been grateful, and from that day had beaten him many a game of tennis and been cheerfully beaten at golf.

But Stuart was not the only white-flanneled tennis-playing youth at Mapleshade farm who was interested in Evelyn Sherwood. In fact, when Stuart finally arose and sought his partner he was chagrined to find that lady briskly serving across the net to Mr. R. Bentley, as the guest book had it. He watched them morosely for a few minutes, then sauntered away. Passing the hammock, he noticed two books depressing its depths and, idly curious, picked them up.

Their titles proclaimed them "Vagabonding in Italy" and "Problems of the Rural School." And one of them had "Evelyn Sherwood" written on the fly leaf. So that was the answer! She was a schoolteacher off on her vacation. If at first he was a little disappointed at his failure to place her, that feeling was immediately succeeded by one of joy that now he might dare hope their friendship would ripen into something more. Hitherto her expensively simple clothes, her casually dropped references to experiences abroad, her apparent acquaintance with well-known people, had made him hold aloof. Come to think of it, this pretense on her part wasn't quite—quite sportsmanlike somehow, but still he could understand and forgive any woman's desire to steal away for her vacation and play she was that which would, in the recalling, lighten the drab monotony of country school-teaching. Besides, when it came to sailing under false colors—how about himself? Reflecting on the truth of that ancient homily that it little be- hoves the pot to call the kettle black, Stuart replaced the books where he had found them.

Meanwhile Evelyn had seized upon the sultriness of the weather as an excuse to stop playing tennis with Mr. R. Bentley and to take herself to the boathouse dock where the canoes were pulled out on floats. Making herself comfortable on some boat cushions, she let her thoughts drift. Who and what was Stuart Bruce? Some things she knew about him—he was extremely good to look upon, very congenial to go about with and an exceptionally fine advertisement for his tailor. Her curiosity consisted in wondering what sort of a family he came from and what kind of a man's job he was holding down in the world.

A moment later, as if disseminated for her information, Evelyn heard that which caused her to sit upright—at first in surprise and then in dismay. Adjoining the boathouse was a pergola frequently occupied by one or more of the boarders, from which she was not visible. "Sure, he's got a case on her," declared a youthful voice which Evelyn recognized as belonging to the daughter of the household. "He usually has on somebody. You know, he comes up here every year—same clothes and all."

"I do you think she likes him?" This in a wad tones from a slightly younger daughter of one of the boarders. "M-m-m, I don't know—but she's too good for him. You'd think from his looks he was out of the Sunday supplement, but he sells stuff on the road soaps, and—oh, washing powders!" Evelyn Sherwood did not catch what followed and did not wait for the completion of the next. "Sure, she'd have drowned if it hadn't been for him—" During supper a sudden thunder shower tumbled noisily over the hills and spilled a liberal amount of rain over the dusty countryside. But it took away the heat, and left behind some stars and a thin young moon.

Evelyn Sherwood came out from the dining room to the veranda, looking softly beautiful in a filmy gown with something gauzy over her hair. Sitting down on the top step she leaned her head against the pillar and looked out across the lake. Just then a tall figure loomed out of the semi-darkness at her elbow and, although uninvited, sat down two steps below. There was an unbroken silence for a moment. Then, "I learned something about you this afternoon," said a very cool voice, "and while what I learned isn't of any great importance one way or another, the fact that it was so different from what you had led me to suppose makes it important."

"Would you mind saying just that again?" said Stuart earnestly. Evelyn looked surprised. "Oh," she said, "you know how much you have talked about the places you have been to, and the things you have done—" "Why," returned Stuart, honestly puzzled, "I didn't know I was such a blow-hard as all that!" "Oh, I suppose you really are a member of the polo club?" "How did you guess?" asked Stuart, starting.

"And perhaps you are a broker or a Wall street business magnate," the cool voice continued with infinite sarcasm. "Why," said Stuart modestly, "not exactly all that. That sounds more like dad."

Evelyn was beginning to be a bit puzzled. "What school do you teach in?" suddenly inquired Stuart out of a clear sky. "Me—teach?" Evelyn threw back her head and laughed merrily. "And you never read about problems of the rural schools?" he asked suspiciously.

"Shades of pedagogy!" laughed Evelyn. "No. But if you're interested in that sort of thing I think I can get hold of it from Miss Baker, the pretty little girl with blue eyes who was reading something like that when I loaned her a book of mine about Italy. As for me, I am a perfectly useless member of society, and when teas and receptions and committees for Red Cross get too tiresome I run away up here. Do you find that soap or washing powder sells better?" asked Evelyn sweetly.

Stuart looked at her in amazement. Then, "I give it up," he said. "What is the answer? But I'll ask Bentley. He knows."

At which remark Evelyn blushed—blushed to think she had paid any attention to the silly chatter, incoherent and unreliable, of a couple of school-girls. But Stuart was talking. "Miss Sherwood, I have been deceiving you in a way. My name isn't exactly Stuart Bruce, but Bruce Stuart McDonald." He ignored the start his listener gave at the revelation that he was none other than a young well-known sportsman and, during the war, one of its bravest aviators. "I rather went to pieces after the armistice and had to give up flying. My physicians told me to get away where I knew nobody and could live simply. I was fool enough to think you were playing a game, too. Please forgive me, and—well, isn't it too wonderful a night to waste in further apology?"

He stood up and held out his hand. "Will you come out in the canoe?" For answer she laid her slim hand in his, and together they walked slowly down toward the moonlit rippled lake.

DROVE FRENCH FROM HAITI
Jean Jacques Dessalines, First Emperor of the Island, a Slave Who Became a Tyrant.

Jean Jacques Dessalines, known as Jean Jacques I. Emperor of Haiti, was a rough and illiterate negro of indefatigable energy who, in 1801 to 1803, defied the French general, Leclerc, brother-in-law of Napoleon Bonaparte, and a French army of 25,000 troops, finally forcing the French to evacuate the island in November, 1803.

Dessalines was born in 1758 at Grand Riviere, Haiti, and sold as a slave at Cape Francois, now called Cape Haitien. In 1791, he became one of the trusty subordinates of Francois Dominique Toussaint, with the rank of lieutenant-general. In 1803 Dessalines was appointed governor for life, inaugurating his rule with a bloodthirsty massacre of all the whites left on the island after its evacuation. In the same year he proclaimed himself emperor and was crowned with great pomp. His subjects soon grew tired of the tyranny and cruel despotism with which he ruled the island, and Dessalines was assassinated in 1806 by two of his officers, Henri Christophe and Alexandre Sabes Petion, the first establishing himself as president in the northern part of Haiti, and the second as president of the southern part.

A NOVEL SIGNATURE.
By GENEVIEVE ULMAR.

I envied Rolfe Dysart. I was not covetous of his many diamonds and expensive attire and the free and easy way in which he flung about his money, but I begrudged him the favor and good will he had won from the one family in the world in which I was interested—Mr. and Mrs. Robert Brandon and their daughter, Adela.

Dysart had flashed in among our little brokerage group, made up of young fellows who had ventured into independent business with little capital but high hopes. He had appeared with no one knowing anything of his antecedents, claimed to have been with a leading eastern bond house and boasted of wealthy, and even titled relatives in London. He rented an elaborate office, made money from the start and attracted many friends. It was I who, captivated by his friendly ways, introduced him to the Brandons, too late regretting it, for, unconsciously perhaps, he won away from me my lady love.

Not that I had any claim on Adela and not that she seemed particularly taken with him, but his glare and glitter caught the old folks and their manner plainly showed that they favored his pretensions. I bore Dysart no grudge because he had supplanted me, for I doubted if he or anybody else guessed the secret of my preference for Adela. However, as I became better acquainted with him I analyzed his nature more studiously, and I noted half hidden defects and learned that some of his claimed former connections would not bear close scrutiny.

I had practically abandoned the field so far as Adela was concerned, for her father tacitly ignored me when we met and Mrs. Brandon exerted herself to make Dysart welcome. My enlis at their home began to be restricted and infrequent, and whenever I met Adela in society she was friendly and indulgent.

I shall never forget the day when a new client entered my office with sailor like gait and outlandishly misfitting garments, although of rich texture. He was swarthy, time beaten, evidently a foreigner, and when he spoke employed a broken, almost unintelligible lingo. However, he ran the tape on the ticker through his fingers in a way that showed he was not unfamiliar with it and propounded the query: "Market eighty-seven on Union Consolidated?"

"Yes," I assented, "with accrued dividends." "Buy me one hundred shares," he ordered, and placed a card before me bearing the printed legend: "Zeno Blecha, Hotel Elismore." Then he drew out a check book, did some figuring presented the sum of his calculation for the shares and added: "Fill out the amount, will you?" "Why, do you not write?" I inquired curiously.

"Oh, I can sign all right," he replied casually, and took back the check when I had done his bidding. Then this unique client went through an unusual and interesting program. He picked up the pen I had used and laboriously and clumsily spelled out in print letters the name "Zeno Blecha." That done, he produced a small metal box and opened its cover, revealing an ink pad saturated with a dark red liquid. Into this he pressed the thumb of his rather ungainly right hand. As he did so, I caught sight of a deep cross-stitch star on the abrased flesh. He pressed the thumb against the pad, tried an impress on the desk blotter, and then upon the check directly under his signature.

"You see," he explained with a whimsical smile, "anybody could print out the signature of a man who does not understand script, but my thumb mark is an unquestionable identification. I will call for the stock tomorrow, and he strolled to the inner office to look over a financial journal. A moment later Rolfe Dysart appeared, a memorandum slip in his hand. "Any Commonwealth Preferred?" he asked, and then gave a great start. I saw him pale, shiver, and his eyes bulged as they rested upon the thumb print on the blotter.

"Where did you get that?" he gasped. The man in the other room uttered a guttural cry and dashed into the outer office. "You scoundrel!" he shouted in wild rage, but Dysart had turned and sprung through the doorway, his pursuer more clumsily following him. I had not recovered from my amazement when, pale and breathless, Zeno Blecha returned. He asked the use of my telephone. I listened while he called up the police, gave a description of Dysart, who had swindled him out of a large sum in New York, and offered a reward for his apprehension. I heard nothing of either my strange client or Dysart for over a month. The latter had mysteriously disappeared from the city, and I doubted not that Blecha was on his trail. One day I met Adela on the street. She seemed glad to see me. That evening's papers told of the arrest of Dysart in another city, and I called at the Brandon home. The welcome reception by Mr. and Mrs. Brandon assured me that the spell of the brilliant Dysart was broken. As to Adela, it was when she confided to me the deep aversion that she had from the first felt for Dysart and the sorrowful gloom of the period when I had apparently forgotten her, that I knew that all along I only had possessed her love.

The invention of some form of protective covering or armor for the body dates back a long way in the history of the world. He describes more than once the full armor of an ancient Greek warrior, greaves, corselet, helmet, shield, sword and spear, and tells us how each article was put on.

Greaves are metal or leather protections for the legs, in fact, something very like a pair of modern cricket pads. One contingent of Greeks, at the siege of Troy, seems to have made a specialty of them, for they are constantly referred to as "well-greaved Achaens,"—Christian Science Monitor.
