THE COURT PLAN

A Strong Broadcast Made By Roscoe Hupper, Formerly Of St. George

A strong arraignment of the proposed change in the Supreme Court went out over the air recently when Roscoe H. Hupper delivered a radio address over station WBNX. Mr. Hupper, who will be remembered by many Knox County residents as a former St. George citizen, said in part:

"The President now has no mandate for his pending attack on our Courts. His proposition was not vouchsafed to the people either before or during the last campaign. His substantial majority did not imply any such mandate. He has been elected twice by independent voters who earlier had swept other administrations into office, and can readily do so again, by majorities quite, or approximately, as substantial."

"Since the independence of the Judiciary has been established by the Constitution itself, any law appearing to impinge on that independence by somehow impairing the effective action of the present Justices, would doubtless be subject to their review, and conceivably be declared by them not to be in accord with the Constitution. This would necessitate an approach by amendment to the subject of limitation of tenure which, after all, is what the President's bill is directed to, rather than mere increase in the number of Justices."

"Considerable argument has been made to effect that the proposal is clearly constitutional. Perhaps that is so, but it is a bold opinion. It is cloaked with the statement that Congress has the undoubted power to increase the number of the Justices. That is not what the President desires. Rather he seeks to force from the Court certain of its members whose opinions have not been agreeable to him. In his radio address of March 9 he indicated that his plan might result in the Court having only nine Justices as now—that is, if he should succeed in forcing six of the present membership to retire. It is the purpose and spirit of his proposal by which it must be tested."

"Senator Robinson, Administration leader in the Senate, in his recent radio address supporting the proposal, asserted in substance that the Senate had the right to consider and determine whether the decisions of the Justices conform to the needs of the times (that is, according to the opinions of Administration majority Senators). In other words, he claimed that since the Senate must confirm judges before they can assume their office, therefore it can review their decisions after they qualify, and in effect institute recall of the non-conformist judges (the is, by diluting membership of the court) because their decisions do not satisfy the Administration in power—notwithstanding that they are by the Constitution appointed to serve during good behavior, that is, for life. "There must be something wrong with a proposal which has to be supported by arguments so lacking in quality and fiber. Could there possibly be a more definite negation than such an argument exhibits of the right to an independent and unfettered Judiciary?"

"It was never intended and should not be ordained now, that our Federal judges trim their views to the political wind with every change of Administration. This would be the corner-stone of our Constitution, the independence of the Judiciary, be dissolved, with the inevitable evil consequences of unrestrained and ill-considered legislative and executive power. It was to avoid over-reaching and oppression by Government, and to insure that changes in our established system should not be made in undue haste, that the admirable scheme of checks and balances was established by the Constitution. It has worked well and should not be abandoned now. "With calm reason applied to the President's proposal, I am convinced that the great majority of our people demand that the Constitution be honestly observed, and that if any change is deemed necessary in our Supreme Court and other Federal courts, the same be accomplished by the orderly process of amendment provided in the Constitution. That would result in more speedy accomplishment of any legitimate object than the attempt to force the pending bill through Congress."

POULTRY HOUSING

Cool Houses In Summer and Warm, Dry Houses In Winter

Summer is the logical time to remodel and fix up the laying house. It is also the time most new ones are built. Did you know that the Extension Service in Maine is tentatively campaigning to improve our poultry housing conditions; that they may have information that would be of use to you?

Cool houses in summer and warm dry houses in winter are the aims. A small outlay per bird will go far in bringing about this condition. It means insulation, in most cases, plus a good ventilation system; also a knowledge of how to operate such a system. This requires a knowledge of some of the fundamental principles involved.

So interested are Extension agents in this problem that they will try this year to confer personally with those who really would like to, or who plan on, trying to improve the poultry house.

ABOUT ANCESTORS

W. R. Walter and Mrs. Clara Overlock Have Some In Common

Editor of The Courier-Gazette:—One of the pleasant surprises of my life came bounding home when reading the article in The Courier-Gazette by Clara S. Overlock, relative to her ancestors. The "walk" she took was far more interesting to me than the "walk" of Alfred E. Smith from the Roosevelt party.

I hope she will not be offended if some relationship exists between us, not of any blood descent as can be reckoned, just a few things in common.

It is this way, as handed down by my ancestors: My great-grandfather, like Mrs. Overlock's, was a Hessian soldier (as I understand) and was taken from his bed at night and pressed into the English service—a lad then of but 18 years. It seems Germany owed England a quota of men and was called upon to furnish them in her war against the colonies. And she certainly needed them!

Well, when the conflict ended there were three at least (as I was told) who chose to remain, build homes and marry among the natives. My great-grandfather was one of them. The other two I never heard named, but am led to believe that Mr. Esancy mentioned by Mrs. Overlock was one of them, and if Mrs. Overlock's great-grandfather was a Hessian soldier, he probably was the other. There is no record to show that either of them was a deserter.

My great-grandfather, great-grandmother (a half sister to Conrad Heyer, the first male child born in Waldoboro) my grandfather and grandmother have a monument erected to their memory in a family cemetery on the land taken up by the grandfathers. It is located on a dry gravelly elevation. The fence around it is not very attractive, but it was built to stand the ages and to keep all wild intruders out. It is built of rough stones and encloses 19 graves, with field stones as markers, besides the four mentioned.

I hope to meet Mrs. Overlock on some early date and talk the matter over personally.

HE'S A COMER

Bruno Mazzeo, Thumbed Way To a Marathon, But Won It

Editor of The Courier-Gazette:—A 12-mile Marathon race was held Saturday afternoon in Revere, Mass. This means nothing to some persons in Rockland who probably would not know what the word means, but to a regular fellow, such as Bruno Mazzeo, it means plenty.

Do you not think it is time this young man was recognized? Here is a fine runner who holds his own with the best in 10 and 12-mile races. Recently in the great Boston run, Patriots' Day, he was 48th. The stretch was 26 miles and in it he defeated more than one-quarter of the field in a race which had some of the nation's best.

In 1936 Bruno hitch-hiked to Revere and won the Point-of-Pines races. This year he repeated the win, again using the thumb method for transportation. Being a boy as runners go, Bruno has 10 good years ahead of him and some day will probably bring fame to Rockland by winning the famous B.A.A. Why not give him a boost to let him know that fellow citizens are with him and appreciate his efforts? I doubt if some residents here know there is such a fine, clean young fellow in the city.

Just Interested.

BUILDING A BRIDGE

For Fair-Haired Youth Who Must Cross "In The Twilight Dim."

North Haven, May 10.

Editor of The Courier-Gazette:—"An old man going a lone highway, Came at the evening, cold and gray, To a chasm vast and deep and wide. The old man crossed in the twilight dim."

The sullen stream had no fear for him. But he turned when safe on the other side And built a bridge to span the tide. "Old man," said a fellow pilgrim near. "You are wasting your strength with building here. Your journey will end with the ending day. You never again will pass this way. You've crossed the chasm deep and wide. Why build you this bridge at evening tide?"

The builder lifted his old gray head—"Good friend, in the path I have come," he said. "There followeth after me today, A youth whose feet must pass this way. This chasm that has been naught to me To that fair-haired youth may a pitfall be. He, too, must cross in the twilight dim. Good friend, I am building this bridge for him."

What kind of a bridge are we building for youth? A place where they can have worthwhile amusement during their leisure hours or a happy-go-lucky bridge which at its end may have a rum shop and a prison?

Vegetables

PLAN your vegetable garden carefully so that you will have a continuous supply. Nearly all may be had in both early and late varieties and a proper attention to this as well as planting at successive dates, will give you the desired results.

SOW your vegetable seeds thick enough to insure a good stand. Just as soon as the seedlings permit, thin out ruthlessly so as to prevent overcrowding.

CLEAN, fresh spinach for the baby has been the incentive that has started many on the home garden road. Nothing that you can buy can compare with that out of your own garden.

VEGETABLES KEEP better in the garden than in the refrigerator. Gather them as you need them. It takes only a very short time for them to lose the sweetness that is so large a part of the desirability of fresh vegetables.

GREEN PEAS immediately from the garden are the sweetest of all vegetables. The sugar starts turning to starch only a little while after picking.

TWO STRAWBERRY plants to each square foot will give the maximum yield. Closer planting restricts the quantity of production. The fruit too, are smaller in size.

WE URGE constant cultivation of your garden for a loose dust area at the top of the soil will conserve moisture and also keep the weeds down.

WHILE MEDICAL men differ on many points, there is one thing in which they are all in accord: Fresh vegetables are the best source of supply for the vitamins so necessary to the human system. As a general rule, the leafy vegetables are preferable.

WHETHER inflation or something else; one thing we know—the cost of living is increasing. The answer to the problem lies in the home garden.

THE K. & L. LEAGUE

Rockland and St. George Tied For Leadership—Vinalhaven's Garrison Finish

Today—Camden at Rockland; Thomaston at St. George; Friday—Camden at Thomaston; Lincoln at St. George; Rockland at Vinalhaven.

Thomaston 7, Lincoln 3

Three were fashionable in yesterday's game at Newcastle. Lincoln scoring three runs in the fourth inning and Thomaston three each in the sixth and ninth. Just for good measure Coach Wood's team made a solitary run in the seventh. Both pitchers were touched up in lively fashion, but errors got the best of the home team.

St. George 11, Vinalhaven 0

St. George opened its baseball season last Tuesday with a victory over the island boys. Kinney of St. George was in rare form allowing two hits, both of them by Peterson, while fanning fourteen. He was given errorless support by his teammates.

The game was a hurling duel for four innings. St. George holding a one-run lead as a result of a base on balls and a three-bagger in the first. In the fifth four hits and an error gave St. George five runs. Brown of Vinalhaven struck out 10 men while walking one but errors, two of which he made himself, helped in the scoring. Mackie and Peterson led the St. George hitters with three hits apiece and Peterson was the only one to hit safely for Vinalhaven a single in the third and another in the ninth.

Vinalhaven 6, Camden 5

Passing up several chances to score, Vinalhaven High trailed to the ninth inning at Camden Saturday, and the gradually departing spectators took it for granted that the home team had won. Vinalhaven, first at bat in the ninth, found itself two runs behind, with two men out and nobody on.

This was not a very inspiring prospect, but the Islanders suddenly discovered what bats were made for, and cracked out four successive hits including Alley's triple to take a one-run lead. It was a transformed team which took the field for the last half, and Camden never got a chance to tie the game.

Camden, the Vinalhaven starting pitcher, developed a streak of wildness in the early part of the game.

THE KIWANIS CLUB

Planning Baked Bean Supper and Entertainment—Gov. Berry Present

At the business meeting of the Kiwanis Club last night a committee was appointed to see to the erection of a road sign on the Camden-Rockland highway.

The wives of the Kiwanians are to bake beans and provide other things necessary for a bean supper and at some place to be decided upon by the committee there will be a supper and entertainment the coming Monday.

A new member, Carl Gove of Mansfield Gove, Inc., was admitted to the club.

Lt. Gov. Leon Berry, district leader of Kiwanis, who was kept from attending last week, was on hand and made announcements of the 21st annual convention of Kiwanis International to be held June 20-24, in Indianapolis; also the New England Convention to be held in Springfield, in the fall.

The special speaker of the evening was Capt. M. D. MacLaughlin who is in charge of the C.C.C. Camp in Camden. A fine talk was given which gave a better insight in the work the boys are doing there.

OUR BOOK CORNER

There are all sorts of books about gardens, and occasionally someone has the desire to read a novel about gardens or in which gardening has a prominent part. One of the best among the new ones is "Four Gardens" by Margery Sharp (Putnam). After making three beautiful gardens at successive periods of her life and under varying conditions, the heroine concentrates in her old years on a roof garden. It has the strange quality of a city sky garden, which always stands for conquest over the city when flowers bloom unconcerned, high above the smoke and separated from good earth by layer upon layer of relentless stone.

"But For Her Garden" by Clarissa Fairchild Oushman (Little Brown) is about a young and very likeable Southern woman who escape from New York life by means of a little place in the country. Elizabeth Kyle's "The Begonia Bed" (Bobbs) begins with the removal of one of these from the lawn of one of two Englishwomen.

Then there is "Elizabeth and Her German Garden," written by a woman not yet known as Countess Russell. If anything better in the way of garden fiction than the book which launched Elizabeth on her career has been provided by anybody else, we have yet to find it.

Other fiction garden books include "Under Green Apple Boughs" by Lucille Grebens (Doubleday); Beverly Nichols' "Down the Garden Path" with its companions "A Thatched Roof" and "A Village in a Valley."

Years of teaching in a church school have convinced Helen Nicolay that there is no book with which people think themselves so familiar as the Bible, yet about which they really know less. In "Our Perennial Bible" (Appleton-Century) she has brought this grand old literature into proper focus, gathering up and presenting in simple language the answers given by modern scholarship to many of the puzzling questions that confront us when we read the Bible. She shows how modern investigation has added to our knowledge of Bible days, describes the origin of the various stories that form such an important part of the Bible, answers the questions that spring into the mind of the 20th century reader of Scriptures, pointing out that, despite the efforts of skeptics to spoil it, the Bible remains a golden treasury

AT STRAND WEDNESDAY-THURSDAY

Charles Boyer and Jean Arthur in Walter Wanger's "History is Made at Night," released through United Artists and a constant and unfailing source of inspiration.

Zona Gale's novel "Birth," has long been acknowledged as a permanent contribution to American fiction. Appleton-Century are now reissuing this famous book, the original edition of which was published by MacMillan.

Zona Gale, by the way, sails for Japan April 29. She will be accompanied by her husband, William Llywelyn Breese. The trip is the result of an invitation from the Japanese Cultural Society. Miss Gale's newest novel "Light Women" has just been published by Appleton-Century.

It is interesting to note that Lief Sund, the hero of Johan Bojer's new novel "By Day and By Night," which has just been published, had a life story which, in some respects, paralleled that of Bojer himself. Bojer was born into the direst poverty, was brought up in a tiny Norwegian fishing village, from which could be seen across the fjord the gay "yellow-red and white houses" of the wealthy, of which Bojer always speaks in the recollections of his childhood. He got his education in a military school. There, of course the resemblance ends. Yet Bojer has obviously drawn for the background of many parts of the book on material which he knows, and it is this which gives his novel the ring of unmistakable truth to life.

the adopted alma mater of Joyce Kilmer, have been quietly pushing toward completion plans for a permanent memorial to the man who penned:

Poems are made by fools like me, But only God can make a tree.

Since Christmas workers have been remodeling a gymnasium into a library dedicated to the memory of Alfred Joyce Kilmer, whose short but remarkable literary career was stimulated by visits to Campton. It was Kilmer's quest for literary excellence that brought him, by a roundabout course, to Campton. Kilmer's first visit was in 1916. The movement for the memorial was begun in 1922 by the Rev. Claude Pernin, S. D., who died last year. He donated a $25,000 legacy he has received, and the fund was increased later by the Kilmer family.

The library will house a collection of bound volumes described in a 1934 Department of Interior report as the largest of any private secondary school in the United States. Kilmer, a member of the 16th Infantry, was killed in action near Oureq, France, Aug. 1, 1918, when he was 31.

Grandson of a famous scientist, brother of another, novelist in his own right, such is a partial description of the tall, thin and stooping Aldous Huxley who is in America for a three months' stay. He told interviewers: "I think I would probably go cracked after a while in New York. It's the only place in the world where one can go to bed at 4 a. m., and get up at 8." Mr. Huxley has been in the United States twice before. He was born in 1894, attended Eton and later took a degree at Oxford. A book of his poems was published when he was 22 and books under his signature have been appearing ever since. Though afflicted with poor eyesight, Mr. Huxley is a steady worker.

Many have read, and are reading, "Of Lena Geyer," by Marcia Davenport. Mrs. Davenport is Manhattan born and reared, the daughter of Alma Gluck, which probably accounts for the fact that she knows the whole world of musical celebrities, both past and present. She is married to Russell Davenport, poet and journalist. They have two children who find New York winters diverting and a Vermont farm an enchanting place in the summer. Their mother, on the contrary, rarely stays long in one place. She goes to Europe frequently and whenever she can, she flies. Vienna is her favorite foreign city, but she confesses to liking California, too. But especially the music of Richard Strauss and George Gershwin.

The Episcopal Ladies Guild met Tuesday afternoon. Mrs. J. D. gave a book report on Willa Cather's "Bess Combs for the Archbishop."—From a Sturgis, S. D. paper.

From the press of Thomas Y. Crowell Co. (New York City) in their spring publications are two notably fine books—"Deep Summer" by Gwen Bristow, and "As One Gardener to Another" by Lucy M. Ellis. "Deep Summer," the story of one of the most enthralling episodes in the history of Louisiana, is a wilderness into a feudal empire, is a moving romance, in which joys and passions and hatreds and efforts seem fed by the smothering enveloping heat of "deep summer," described in this way:

"The sun came up with a blistering glow, so bright that sometimes for a little while one could forget its intensity, but it moved across the sky with a torrent of fire which even was not escaping. Then when evening came, the sun tumbled down again into the river, leaving streaks of purple and red to be blotted out by the dark, and even at night the heat still pressed down with a weight that made the covering of a sheet unbearable, and one tossed about until fagged asleep from exhaustion, to be wakened by that pitiless sun pushing between the logs. Even when it rained coolness was brief and one paid for it afterward, for when the sun came out again the ground began to steam and the air was so thick one could hardly breathe."

Drama runs high—the marriage of Philip and Judith, the birth of their first son, their whole tempestuous life in fact, the story of Caleb and Dolores, the yellow fever tragedy, the sorrow of Angèle—dramatic pictures, indeed, burst from every page. All this set against the background of the American Revolution, the Louisiana Purchase, the first sugar-mill and first cotton gin, and finally the forming of the State itself.

The story is well written, the author evidently carefully schooled in the history of the period of which she writes. Miss Bristow also possesses the faculty of keeping her readers absorbed and in suspense from cover to cover—there is no let down anywhere in the story.

Miss Bristow is of Southern stock, having been born in Marion County, South Carolina. She obtained her early education in public and sectarian schools, later attending Judson College in Alabama. Becoming interested in newspaper work, she attended the Columbia University School of Journalism. Then she went South again to become a reporter on the New Orleans Times-Picayune, beginning work there in 1925, and remaining with this paper until 1933. While there Miss Bristow got the idea for a story dealing with the early settlement of Louisiana, and much of the local color was obtained while traveling around the state on assignments for the Times-Picayune. She makes her home in New Orleans, and is now working on a second novel dealing with the dynasty of the Larnes and their country in the 19th century.

"As One Gardener to Another" is the product of a dirt gardener who has done her own digging. Written in a delightfully informal and understandable manner, it impresses you first and foremost by its sound commonsense. Miss Ellis tells you how to get the best out of flowers, the most out of gardens of various kinds, she discusses what flowers to plant and how to plant them. The book is most happily planned to fit garden conditions in both the East and the West, so that it may be valuable in any part of the country. Having access to gardens from "coast to coast," Miss Ellis tells of the different behavior of the same plant under changing longitude, thus able to tell why some dearly beloved plants flourish in the east but languish in the west, and vice versa.

The chapter entitled "A Garden Which Runs Itself" is timely for the busy man or woman who perhaps has only a weekend for gardening. It was in this very chapter that I was impressed by the friendliness of Miss Ellis' book—she writes as she would talk and has the art of making everyone feel her friend. Not only that, but she creates a very human touch, a companionship, between flowers and persons. It is "Where Flowers Come From" she has artfully interwoven historical facts, which would make a strong appeal to Miss Anna Coughlin who has made no small study of this phase of plant life. I was particularly interested in the paragraph devoted to the founding and development of the Shirley poppy (pimpernel). Then there are chapters on making perennials grow, biennials vs. perennials, pansies and phlox, indispensable, keeping the borders bright, etc. Pests receive attention with the naming of various types and the cures. "Flowers for Market" is fascinating, particularly the portion telling of making daffodils bloom in a washing machine! The chapters devoted to rock gardens and water gardens are brimming full of information. Night-gardeners receive attention and what can be more intriguing than "White Gardens and Perfume"? Doesn't that heading alone make you long to read Mrs. Ellis' book? Garden furniture is given intelligent treatment, also birds for any garden, and odds and ends.

She is candid enough to admit there are many flowers, well known and popular types, too, that she has never grown, yet sensible enough to include some of these in a chapter, and treated wisely, too, for those who do enjoy them. A planting calendar, intended for eastern use, takes the place of the usual index.

Lucy M. Ellis has had two interests—for vacation, newspaper work; for avocation, gardens. Immediately after graduating from Wellesley College she had her first newspaper job, on the Buffalo Express; next on the Journal in Milwaukee. She took the place left vacant by Zona Gale, and when Mrs. Ellis herself resigned, her place was taken by Edna Ferber. This time she went to the State of Washington where she filled newspaper positions of every kind—city editor, Sunday editor—and did special correspondence for a number of papers.

Mrs. Ellis and her husband became deeply interested in the flowers and wild life of the Northwest and spent all their vacations in the mountains or on Puget Sound. Mrs. Ellis has come to be regarded as an authority and has had frequent speaking engagements before garden clubs and horticultural societies.

THE SAUNTERER

A. B. Crocker

Log of the Sch. Hyena whereof A. Barter is master: April 13—This day opens clear, light air from the northwest. Got underway about 7 a. m.; put all sail on her and ran before it for Castle Island, Boston Harbor, and came to anchor under the lee of the island and went ashore to look over old Fort Independence.

My first view of the fort was in 1881, when I sailed out of Boston harbor for the first time, but never visited it again until many years later. It is the best place to view the shipping bound in and out of the harbor, as every vessel bound to the wharves must pass by this spot and the ship channel is on the island side.

I took my glasses along to see what I could see for shipping. What I could not see was the Pride of Penobscot River, Steamer Belfast, Capt. Alfred E. Rawley. Quoth the captain, "Nevermore!" What a moving picture it would be to see pass in review the types of vessels that have sailed by the Old Fort in a century of time.

Donald McKay's monument looks upon Boston harbor, but what a different view from what it was in his day. A writer in the Boston Transcript of April 12, 1886 said, "The gradual changes that go on from day to day and year to year are not always appreciated by those who live in them, but they become startling to one who has been away and returns after a lapse of time to a familiar place."

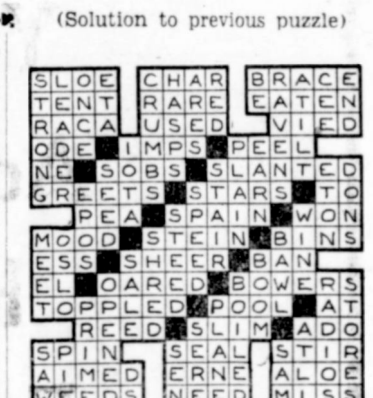

I came to Boston in 1886 and have never resided farther away than Somerville—three miles—since that time. Having seen those changes in 50 years come gradually, it is no surprise to watch the shipping in Boston harbor. In 1886, ships, barques, brigs, schooners, steamers, and small craft; in 1937, steamers, and if one sees a schooner other than a fishing schooner (that while she has sails and uses them, is propelled principally by an engine of some type) is a sight.

In 1886, steamers for Down East were listed as: Bangor, Cambridge, Katahdin, Penobscot, Star of the East, Portland, John Brooks, Tremont, State of Maine, Cumberland, Yarmouth, Alpha, Dominion. These were small, side-wheel steamers, lit by oil lamps and they were smelly. Sailing to St. John, N. B., was the Str. St. John, 10,000 tons, everything modern; The Yarmouth and Evangeline sailing to Yarmouth, N. S., were 7,000 tons, modern. Those with Str. Acadia, 10,000 tons which runs from New York to Yarmouth in the summer, comprise the fleet of ocean-going steamers bound Down East. "One hundred years and 50 have I told," what will it be at the close of 1986? Come on, prophets!

Not much doing in the passenger steamer line today—only the Savannah and New York boats. Freighters are coming and going every day. Here is one: Tai Yang, and in Chinese characters also, but she is a Norwegian motor ship in the Chinese trade; no Chinamen on board, all Norse. The only schooner in sight was the fourmaster which has been on Spectacle Island for two years.

The United States has to import corn and corned beef. If the Roving Reporter would imitate the Dutch and add these places to the itinerary of one of his Rovings, he would have extra rich material for stories. I have just read a story entitled "Full and By," telling of the voyage of Sch. Jason, once a brig, from Boston to St. John, N. B., with iron, thence to Boston with laths.

It was a real voyage according to the writer. In the introduction, by another person, there is brought out a thought about water-borne transportation, viz. "It is more than probable that in days to come, wooden schooners will be sailing the coastwise seas long after the giant liners have been laid up, because all passenger traffic, all mail and light cargo, will be moving through the air at 10,000 feet.

The Eastern packets which sailed from Russia Wharf, Boston, 50 years ago, while not fast, got to their Down East destinations in due season, and if there were any in existence, might be doing so now, and making a living at it. History might repeat itself. Sch. Jason, eight days out from St. John, N. B., lost her rudder somewhere around Grand Manan, vessel almost waterlogged, out of provisions, cook crazy and in irons. The captain, mate and two sailors nearly worn out, arrive off Boston Light; the tugboat captain looks her over and says, "What 'hell!"

Captain says, "We had a bad trip."

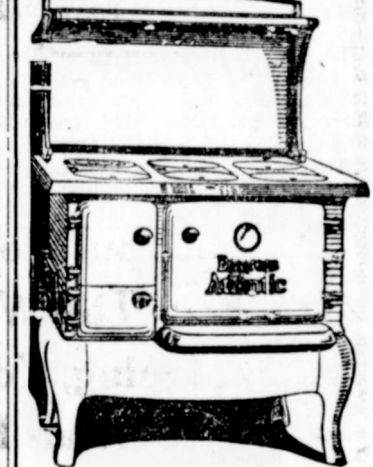

The mate says, "Judas priest! what a voyage!"

And we'll let it go at that, in the vernacular.

Dear Subscriber:

We feel that our subscribers will show their appreciation in making an extra effort to take care of their subscription accounts now when presented through the campaign we are conducting. With improved local conditions, we feel that we are justified in making this effort at this time.

One of your friends or neighbors will call on you soon with reference to a renewal of your subscription or the payment of a back account. This Campaign will give employment to a number of local people, your friends and neighbors, who will put the extra money they will be able to make into immediate circulation in the community.

The courage, the confidence, the enthusiasm of our workers, the success of the Campaign as a whole, is in your hands. When you postpone paying your account, when you fail to encourage and help your friends who will talk to you about a subscription, you are opposing a movement the success of which should be a matter of community interest and pride.

But we do not believe many will do this. Knox County people are known for their friendliness and spirit of co-operation and paying their honest debts.

We are frankly taking this means of asking all of our subscribers to make every possible effort to either renew their subscriptions promptly or make substantial payments on their accounts, and at the same time help a friend win one of the cash prizes. In matters of business most of us are in the same boat, and it is necessary that we pull together. Our hopes for the future, our courage, our confidence in the final solution of our most pressing problems are all affected by every conversation with our neighbors.

We call your attention to this with the thought that you will be glad to extend to our campaign workers every courtesy and encouragement. Remember that what you say and what you do about your subscription will either prove a sharp setback to someone who expects and needs your support and encouragement, or will give you the satisfaction of having done your part and will send him or her on the way rejoicing.

We thank you,

THE COURIER-GAZETTE.

J. M. Richardson, Manager.

There are 174 different kinds of fish in the Gulf of Maine and possibly an equal number of shell-fish species—this Gulf extends from Cape Cod to Cape Sable and is sort of canyon dug out by the rivers—our lobster catch has shrunk from 19,000,000 pounds in 1919 to around 5,000,000 in 1936 and yet we have better equipment and boats—this decline has been a gradual one and shows conclusively that the supply is declining.

Earnest W. Barnes, chief biologist of the Massachusetts Bureau of Marine Fisheries believes that we have unlimited possibilities for clam culture along our coast—he has offered to help this Department plant experimental beds during the summer—at present he is helping us in our lobster rearing work at the Federal Hatchery at Boothbay Harbor—he states that three Massachusetts towns spent $25,000 two years ago on clam culture and this year will take $250,000 worth of clams from the flats.

The crawfish situation is being battled on several fronts—Canada with its customary promptness in support of its fisheries solved the problem in quick order—a parliamentary measure was passed defining "lobster" as the shellfish known as "Homarus" which is the northern variety—no crawfish can be sold in that country as lobster—we might go well to have the same definition this week again a large New York market advertises "crawfish" as "fresh lobstermeat" at 49¢ a pound—we have to get at least $1.50 a pound to make it pay—Congressman Oliver has been working on the Federal Trade Commission using material supplied by this Department and has been assured that a study will be made.

Scallops are caught off the South American coast but we have never been bothered with competition from that source—Japan offers a different picture however as it is sending large quantities of bi-valves of a good quality over here and underselling our fishermen by a wide margin—the George Bank draggers have started their season and are doing fairly well—Rockland is the largest fish port—the small boats do well along the coast until the Japanese competition drove the price down to $1.25 a gallon—the winter price should have been over $2.00.

The fishing industry on both coasts is facing a new era due to better merchandising methods and newly developed products—this means that the large companies are modernizing their equipment and building new boats—Maine is getting a big share of the boat building as our boats are considered the best—the Morse yards at Thomaston—the Snow yard at Rockland, the Bath Iron Works and several smaller companies are getting the bulk of this work—two or three years of steady work, just on fish boats is seen, ahead.

The Canadian government last year spent $200,000 on a fishery advertising campaign using big space in the newspapers and magazines. The per capita consumption figures were increased and the work will continue this year—several States and Canadian provinces are now establishing fishery information and marketing bureaus—this state has similar plans underway—we are about 10 years behind the other states in the promotion of our fisheries—the Maine Development Commission and this Department will cooperate on this work during the next two years.

We see a brighter future for our fishing industry—a lot of work has been done to build up and this will be increased from time to time.

The Central Maine's Net Gain Last Year Was $344,565 Over 1935

The annual report of Central Maine Power Company for 1936, issued Monday shows operating revenues of $6,617,013, an increase of $568,596 over the previous year. Net income, after deductions for operating expenses, maintenance, depreciation and taxes, was $1,650,315.12 which is $344,565 more than for 1935. President Wyman reports:

"While the gross revenues of Central Maine Power Company for 1936 showed very satisfactory gains, gas revenues decreased $17,506, primarily because of the termination of service in Bath. There was comparatively little change in railway and water revenues. Revenue from steam sales decreased $20,541. The year as a whole showed marked progress in several ways in spite of an unprecedented flood which threatened dire results early in March.

"The program of refunding outstanding mortgage obligations in the low interest market was continued, resulting in a considerable annual saving."

As shown in the report, approximately 96 percent of the Company's revenue was derived from the sale of electrical energy; the remaining 4 percent was divided between gas, railway, water and steam operations.

Provision for state and municipal taxes for the year was $687,282, while Federal taxes (other than Income Tax) amounted to $113,345. Sales of electrical appliances for the year were $769,309, an increase of $122,549 over the year 1935. In addition to other appliances, sales for the year included 1024 electric ranges, 1275 domestic electric refrigerators, 426 electric water heaters and 1462 electric washers were sold by the Company.

President Wyman reported that construction expenditures amounted to approximately $950,000. Besides the usual extensions and replacements of property, a 5000 kilowatt steam turbine was installed at the mill of the Maine Seaboard Paper Company in Bucksport. About 63 miles of new distribution were constructed making service available to 283 new customers.

Under general statistics, the Company reported that the total electric output for the year was 514,365,940 kilowatt hours, as compared with 461,498,827 in 1935. The total number of customers served increased from 85,806 in 1935 to 87,314 for the year just ended.

In referring to the flood of March, 1936, President Wyman said, "The dams, power plants and other equipment withstood the high water with comparatively little damage. Operating expenses were increased by $88,243.58 from this source.

"During the flood three things impressed themselves on the management in an unforgettable way.

1. The patience and forbearance of such of our customers as were temporarily out of service and who cheerfully waited until that service could be restored.

2. The loyalty and devotion of members of our organization who worked day and night under very difficult conditions to maintain the company's service and protect its property.

3. The amount of foresight and splendid planning and engineering skill that had gone into the building of our various dams and hydroelectric plants. When they were exposed to the full force of a flood which exceeded any other on record, they not only withstood the battering to which they were subjected with little damage, but for the most part continued to function as though such a flood were an everyday occurrence."

HAD A FINE SEASON

Educational Club, Largest Woman's Study Club In Maine, Ends 17th Season

The finale to the winter season of the Woman's Educational Club took place Friday at the Grand Army hall with one of the most enjoyable and successful gatherings in its 17 active years. This, the largest woman's study club in Maine, has secured 10 new life members this year, making a total of 17. Those admitted to membership number 150. Attendance during the past year averaged 50 at afternoon sessions and 125 at night. A civics lesson conducted by Mrs. Ellen Dyer at each assembly, and as delightful start to the year's work a banquet was enjoyed. Mrs. Minnie Miles serving as chairman. Among other observances, a memorial has been held for deceased members.

Speakers have included F. A. Winslow on the subject, "When the Ghost Walks"; Miss Edna Gregory, "Bahama Islands"; Rev. P. W. Brown of Camden, "Religion and Citizenship"; Miss Villa Hayden of Augusta, "Voice Use"; Prof. Albert Whitmore of the U. of M., "Shipbuilding and Other Industries of the Past Generation"; Capt. Charles G. Hewett, head of the National Youth Administration, "Work With the Boys and Girls for an Education."

Dr. Milton Proctor, president of Westbrook Junior College, "Can the Hickory Stick Sing?"; Harrison Lyseth, head of the Secondary Schools of Maine, "You Never Can Tell"; Mrs. Eugene Sleeper, descriptions of articles from Western Africa owned by W. H. Thomas; Rev. H. I. Holt of Warren, "A Vital Modern Aspect of Education"; Grube Cornish, head of the State School for Boys, "Boys"; Frederick W. Smith, superintendent of the Maine Christian Civic League, "Liquor and Gambling."

Pictures of the fishing industry were shown by Richard Reed, and in this connection the club voted to support the Department of Sea and Shore Fisheries in its rehabilitation program. Views displayed by George A. Harrison of Portland depicted "Alaskan Interlude." The year's programs also included a pageant by the Clark Island Sunday School.

Members who have not missed a meeting are: Mrs. Rich, Mrs. Merrill, Mrs. Bradstreet, Mrs. Lela Benner, Mrs. Ida Simmons, Mrs. Cora Haraden, Mrs. Elsie Loring, Mrs. Fannie L. Dow, Mrs. Priscilla Richardson and Miss Bertha Orbeton. Only one meeting missed was the record of Mrs. Etta Sanborn and Mrs. Zaida Winslow.

Life members number: Elizabeth Messer, Nina Gregory, Mrs. Carl R. Gray, Clytie French Spear, Alice Redman, Carrie Wallace, Mary Perry Rich, George Harkness, Bertha Orbeton, Annie F. Hahn, Mrs. Priscilla Richardson, Cora Hall, Lida Spear, Lottie Whitten, Cora Haraden, Bessie Bowers, Mrs. Clyde Smith.

Miss Mabel Harding has resigned as secretary, her successor to be elected.

Ten picnics were held during the year at the homes of members, a speaker being engaged for each. These have included: Mrs. Nina Gregory of Glen Cove, hostess, Rev. Charles A. Marshall, speaker on "Education Among the Indian Savages on the Upper Amazon"; Mrs. Hazel Woodward of Glen Cove, hostess, Rev. J. Clarence Leckemby of Pittsfield and Prof. Harry T. Baker of Goucher College, Baltimore, as speakers; Mrs. E. M. Lawrence, hostess, E. M. day." Mrs. Winnie Horton and Mrs. Malvina Crawford, hostesses, Levi Flint, speaker on "Highway Safety," and Charles F. Dwinall, Legislator-elect on "Legislative Problems Confronting Maine at the 86th Legislature."

Mrs. Minnie Miles, hostess, Hon. William Linnell of Portland, speaker on "Maine's Political Issues of Today," and Prof. Wilbert Snow of Wesleyan College; Mrs. Carrie Williams Fowler, hostess, John Pomeroy, speaker on "Activities of the Chamber of Commerce;" Mrs. Minnie Rogers, hostess, Hon. E. Carl Moran, speaker on "Politics" and Eugene C. C. Rich of Camden, speaker on "Outdoor Sports."

The final program contained much of interest to every member. Opening exercises were followed by current event discussions led by Mrs. Emma Bradstreet who gave short report of Rabbi Olan's address on "Peace." Considering this opportune topic, members voiced opinion that armaments for proper defense are necessary, and that any neutrality law could not be 100% effective in case of a World War. As a whole, they were not in favor of joining the League of Nations at the present time.

Mrs. Bradstreet spoke of the Wagner Labor Act and its effect upon labor and capital, saying that as it stands it is a great advantage to labor if they rightly use the power it gives, but that an amendment is needed to properly balance the law, to make labor responsible for its acts. She discussed the strike situation, especially in Maine, and the stand taken by Governor Barrows was warmly applauded by the club.

The subject of relief was also discussed. Mrs. Bradstreet saying that there could be no economy in the country if emergency measures, such as C. C. WPA and other New Deal projects were continued or made permanent. The nation is traveling at a pace, she said which invites inflation and disaster. No national life assumes permanency because of its leader but rather through the standards of the populace.

Even the Senators, elected by the people, seem to fear the Administration, according to the speaker, who continued with the thought that the country may as a result get a Supreme Court packed with "Yes" men by the President, thus destroying the liberty which is the citizens' heritage.

A report of the work of Rev. Frederic Smith at the Maine Legislature was read and excited favorable comment. An article by Lincoln Colcord on "The Position of Maine" was read by Mrs. Zaida Winslow and in it the author expressed pride in the stand Maine has taken in affirming the principles on which this country was founded, especially expressed in the last Presidential election, even though the State has been ridiculed for it.

Mrs. Etta Sanborn spoke of the President's refusal to address the D. R. Convention and of the gold policy of the country, which nobody seems to understand. Other matters receiving study were gambling and the illegality of beano and card playing for prizes, old age pensions and the sales tax.

A well-written paper on "Jane Addams" by Marguerite Gould was read by Mrs. Nettie Stewart, and in the "Famous Women" series for future meetings, Mrs. Stewart will report on Florence Nightingale; Mrs. Minnie Rogers on Queen Victoria; and Mrs. Ida Simmons on Frances Willard.

A committee to outline a plan for history study is composed of Miss Bertha Orbeton, Mrs. Nettie Stewart and Mrs. Mabel Wiley. The afternoon session ended with a lively discussion on "Are There More Christians Inside or Outside the Church." It was agreed that there are many Christians outside the Church who could help even more by uniting with some church.

Newly-elected officers are: President, Mary Perry Rich; vice presidents, Ida Simmons, Bertha Orbeton, Jeanette Dunton, Elizabeth Morton, Mabel Harding, Rebecca Ingraham and Etta Corel; secretary, Mabel Wiley; assistant secretary, Marguerite Gould; treasurer, Zaida Winslow.

The stationery award was made to Mrs. Etta Covell and the book, "How to Win Friends and Influence People" presented to Miss Bertha Orbeton for securing memberships.

Dr. Harry Trust, president of the Bangor Theological Seminary gave a masterly address on "Builders of a New Civilization." He finds that all is not well with the world of today. Speaking of Germany and the Nazi regime, he referred to the rise of Fascism in Italy, with Mussolini as Dictator, the condition of the peoples of these countries—without real liberty of thought and action, as being far from ideal.

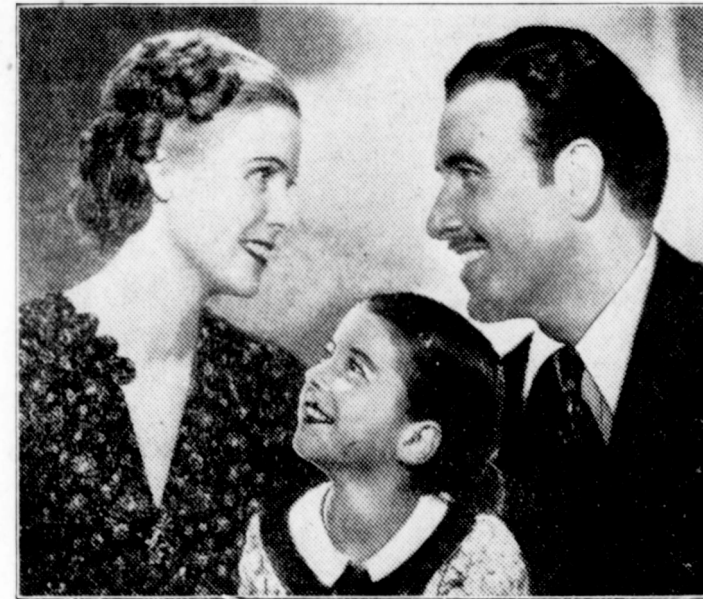

The Russian people also have a great distance to go to find their plans proving successful, although Communism has in itself some elements of right thinking and right living. Because of past abuses of religion in Russia, all religion has been abandoned and they have become a nation of atheists. No nation can progress without a belief in God. In Maine even, citizens will fast become Pagan unless means are found of taking religion to rural districts. This may be said of the whole country as well. To be successful builders of a new civilization there must be one bulwark—real religion, a broad and true religion, embracing all faiths that are built on truth, justice and equality.

A period of discussion followed this address, after which Miss Dorothy Harvie sang two solos in a delightful manner and gave an exceptionally fine reading on "The Lady of Shalott."

Last on this well-filled program was a most pleasing talk by Mrs. Leah Ramsdell Fuller on her European cruise of last summer. In a charming manner, Mrs. Fuller took her listeners to the many countries she visited and in the pictures taken by her they saw those distant lands and were thrilled by the color and beauty of the scenes.

Penobscot View Grange will hold a picnic supper preceding the meeting Thursday night.

FIVE MILES AWAY

Yet Philco Television Audience Saw and Heard the Whole Show

Beautiful models displayed the newest spring fashions, and carried on a running conversation as they strolled; singers, musicians and entertainers enlivened the occasion; a famous news commentator interviewed an equally noted baseball manager; news reels flashed the latest events in pictorial form.

Though the audience was seated five miles away from the studio in which the performance was being staged, the vivid feeling remained that those passing before the camera miles away were in the receiving room in flesh and blood.

That was the impression carried away by 150 editors of leading magazines and newspapers recently when the first large-scale demonstration of Philco High Fidelity television with 441 line pictures was staged in Philadelphia by Philco Radio and Television Corporation.

The most comprehensive program ever attempted in television, marking a real challenge to the entertainment and commercial possibilities contained in the projection of sound pictures through the ether without wires into television receiving instruments, was staged in the studios of Philco in Northeast Philadelphia.

Clear across the city in its outlying section, the group of editors sat comfortably before the receiving sets installed at Germantown Cricket Club and saw the figures of the performers vividly reproduced in the mirror-like plate in the top of the receiving instrument, and heard with perfect fidelity every word even a whisper, from the studio.

It was the first large-scale demonstration of the new 441 scanning line as contrasted to the 345 line pictures heretofore produced, and the improvement in the picture quality, the absolute faithfulness of the reproduction, amazed the engineers and technical writers, who gathered with the editors.

The program presented many novelties designed to show Philco's advance in television. The engineers arranged unique experiments which clearly evidenced the increase in clearness between the old 345 line and the new standard of 441 lines.

The first television fashion show introduced more than a score of leading models in a complete display of midday's new spring apparel, and clearly indicated the commercial possibilities contained in television, which could carry demonstrations of this character into the home of the future.

Boake Carter, famous Philco news commentator, in a rapid-fire interview with Connie Mack, famous baseball manager, showered the opportunities of bringing sport news and interviews, with notables into home receiving outfits. Musical features, vocal numbers and movies and news reels reproduced with complete fidelity and satisfaction.

Sayre M. Ramsdell, vice president of Philco, in a brief address answered two questions that constantly are being asked. He said that television would positively not supersede sound broadcasting and that it was impossible to predict just how soon television will become a part of our everyday life.

The latter depends upon approval of technical standards for television by the Federal Communications Commission so that any receiver will receive from any transmitter within range; the present limited range will have to be increased; the Government will have to issue commercial licenses suitable for television in the 42-90 megacycle band; development of a source of programs; and reduction in the cost of receiving apparatus.
