A. H. Brooks, Author

No man, in the most talked-of circumstances, can help his feelings. He might as well wish to shut out from his life all the emotions that make up the human soul. But a man's feelings cannot be shut out; they are as much a part of his nature as his body is. They are as much a part of his body as his organs. They are as much a part of his organs as his blood. They are as much a part of his blood as his life. They are as much a part of his life as his thinking. They are as much a part of his thinking as his reasoning. They are as much a part of his reasoning as his judgment. They are as much a part of his judgment as his character. They are as much a part of his character as his conduct. They are as much a part of his conduct as his actions. They are as much a part of his actions as his successes. They are as much a part of his successes as his failures. They are as much a part of his failures as his efforts. They are as much a part of his efforts as his will. They are as much a part of his will as his motives. They are as much a part of his motives as his desires. They are as much a part of his desires as his impulses. They are as much a part of his impulses as his passions. They are as much a part of his passions as his inclinations. They are as much a part of his inclinations as his tastes. They are as much a part of his tastes as his pleasures. They are as much a part of his pleasures as his pain.

The Greater Mother

How did you come to lose that beautiful baby? I remember it very well. It was on a cold winter's night, and I was walking home from a meeting. I had just turned the corner of the street where the church is, and I saw a woman standing by the church entrance. She was holding a little baby in her arms, and she looked very much distressed. I went up to her and asked her what was the matter. She told me that her baby had been taken away from her, and she had no idea where it was. I promised to help her, and I went back to the church and found the baby. I took it back to her, and she was so grateful. She said it was the only thing she had left in the world.

Dr. Johnson, being once asked whom he considered to be the greatest of the English-speaking world, replied, "I do not know. I do not know whom to put first. I do not know whom to put second. I do not know whom to put third. I do not know whom to put fourth. I do not know whom to put fifth. I do not know whom to put sixth. I do not know whom to put seventh. The Reporter.

A new year is to all the Reporters.

Winter is almost here, and the winds are beginning to howl.

The sun is setting, and the shadows are growing long.

The snow is falling, and the world is becoming cold.

The leaves are falling, and the trees are bare.

The reporter is busy, and the office is crowded.

The printer is at work, and the ink is flowing.

The typewriter is clicking, and the paper is curling.

The reporter is writing, and the pen is flying.

The world is changing, and the future is uncertain.

The reporter is hopeful, and the future is bright.

The printer is proud, and the office is happy.

The reporter is busy, and the day is long.

The printer is tired, and the eyes are heavy.

The reporter is writing, and the pen is heavy.

The world is changing, and the future is uncertain.

The reporter is hopeful, and the future is bright.

The printer is proud, and the office is happy.

The reporter is busy, and the day is long.

The printer is tired, and the eyes are heavy.

The reporter is writing, and the pen is heavy.

The world is changing, and the future is uncertain.

The reporter is hopeful, and the future is bright.

The printer is proud, and the office is happy.
