Dear Gay Rutherford:

It is always a pleasure to learn of a new Maine author and book, and when we read of your MAINE INTERLUDE, we immediately tried to find information about you. We shall have to admit failure, and so we must ask: are you from Maine?

We are especially interested in all Maine writing, and we noted your book in the Bulletin of the Maine Library Association. At present, we write because of the Maine Author Collection, a permanent exhibit of Maine books, most of the two thousand volumes inscribed presentation copies. It is a fascinating and valuable collection, and attracts visitors and students because it is the only place where all books of all Maine writers are gathered together and preserved as a unit, together with biographical and critical material.

We hope that we shall have the pleasure of adding an inscribed copy of MAINE INTERLUDE to the shelves, and that you will be so kind as to let us know whether or not you were born in this state.

Sincerely yours

hmj

Dear Mrs. Jacobs,

How kind of you to write me in regard to "Maine Interlude," written under my pen name of Gay Rutherford. I am honored but most que sic I deserve it because I was not born in Maine. I was even late in discovering it, alas, but perhaps the discovery was therefore the more exciting. I was born in New York City and since twenty-one have wandered. I have no settled home but I refuse to say "no home." All America is my home at least. For so many years I said, "When I hang my hat in home, and I have not laid it. Now I have a hat so I am here for a while where I don't need it. What I love and am interested in is home. And I set my home among those places. I believe in writing of please so I can go back there and be welcome

I spent twelve summers in Rockland which I call "Strawberry" in the several books I have set there. This summer, also, I missed. My first story of Maine was called "Pleasant Street:" I always stay at 16 Pleasant Street and have used the house. Mr. and Mrs. Cassley, the Maine Central Steam Agent, are splendid friends.

I am working on a Maine story now so as I write my editor my mind and heart are up in Maine while my body is in Florida. I'm calling it "Where the Winds Blow True" - and I can feel them all the way down here where the right now in too warm. All those grand cool weeks of the rocky border coast of Maine in summer and where else but in Augusta can I sit on the porch of a great capital building in a rocking chair to me there.
Chairs are a symbol of the happy, informal-ity of the State of Maine.

I write of Florida, California, Arizona, and the lovely Eastern Shore of Maryland. I believe in clean, interesting stories of present day life and problems pleasantly told. I believe in laughter and basic goodness in everyone. I almost said almost but I won’t. And I am not very important so I’m not surprised you found out nothing about me.

In fact I wonder if I am important enough to be part of your collection which sound so interesting. You must have my five friends Elizabeth Ogilvie who lives on the wonderful island. I’m writing Miss Sacks, Arcadia House editor, asking her to send you a copy of "Maine Interlude" since I’ve given mine away. If you need
I shall proudly autograph it when I come to see your collection in early June.
That I should look forward to in any case.
If you feel I don't really qualify as a and when I drop in I'm sure I can make you laugh at least. You know, "Put me as the "White Brick State."

one. Again thanks for your interest and best wishes to you and to your fine work.

Dear Mr. Gifford:

It is delightful to have your friendly letter. May we assure you immediately that the Maine Author Collection includes not only the books written by people born in Maine, but also books with Maine as a setting, and books by writers who are closely connected with the state. Such authors as Laura E. Richards, Ben Ames Williams, Henry Beston and Elizabeth Coatsworth and Gladys Hasty Carroll are here; and certain books (in which the state appears as a background) of, for instance, Abbie Huston Evans, Elinor Graham, Gerald Warner Brace, Hubert V. Coryell, and of course your friend Elisabeth Ogilvie, who is one of our favorite adopted authors.

There are many more, but you can see that Maine itself is the keynote. If a writer was born here, or lives here, or uses Maine as part of a story, we are eager to have the book in the collection.

You modestly wonder whether you are important enough to be included. Don't you think that the word is relative? Is the lovely little book TOMMY THATCHER GOES TO SEA by Berta and Elmer Hader, or THE RADIANT LIFE by Rufus M. Jones, more important? To whom, and for what purpose? The Haders set their story for children in Maine; Dr. Jones was born in Maine. Both books are in the Maine Author Collection and we are proud of both.

We should enjoy very much adding any of your Maine books to the exhibit shelves, and we look forward to saying "Thank you" when you call.

Sincerely yours

Dear Mr. Gifford:

Thank you very much for the copy of MAINE INTERLUDE which arrived today. We are adding it to the Maine Author Collection with appreciation of your generous interest, and delight in another Maine book. Perhaps when you are here some day you will inscribe it for us.

The "grand cool winds" of which you spoke are coming out of a gray northeast sky today, and promising us snow soon; but when warmer weather heralds another summer, we shall hope to see you and express our thanks in person. Meanwhile, a comfortable and happy winter to you.

Sincerely yours

Dear Mrs. Jacob.

Thanks for your grand letters. And best wishes for all kinds of health, wealth and above all that "peace which passeth understanding".

I feel quite excited when I write Christmas cards because they are like happy little visits to all my widely scattered friends. I have just sent one to Min Ogden telling her how proud I am to have been asked for a book and what grand letters you have written me.

Sincerely,
