Now that the war in the Far East is over, the cordial relations which for upwards of a century existed between the United States and Russia should and doubtless will be resumed. That the St. Peter-burg government will welcome a renewal of the former friendly understanding is evident from the communication made by Mr. Witte to President Roosevelt at Oyster Bay on the evening of Sept. 9. The peace envoy informed our Chief Magistrate that the Czar had rescinded the ukase increasing by thirty per cent. the import duties on American steel and iron products, with the exception of agricultural implements, the importation of which Russia could not afford to check. As a matter of fact, this decree is said to have affected only about $3,000,000 worth of iron and steel products, but discouraged our iron and steel producers who were looking forward to a great expansion of the Russian demand for our commodities. It is an interesting fact that the abolition of the thirty per cent. increased duty—which, by the way, is a voluntary and gratuitous act on Russia's part, no reciprocal concession being requested from the United States—was suggested to the Czar at Peterhof by Mr. Witte himself, who as Minister of Finance, had advised his sovereign to impose the increased duty, by way of retaliation for the extra duties imposed under the Dingley tariff on Russian sugar because of the bounty alleged to be paid by Russia to exporters.

The Miser.

The door of the doctor's house was closed almost noiselessly, and John Breen went slowly down the short flight of steps, his gayish countenance working with fury.

"A gunier for prescribing more rest and nourishment, plus a bottle of druggist's filth!" he muttered. "What on earth possessed me to consult him?"

Reaching the pavement he began to walk swiftly, but a throbbing behind the old scar on his temple compelled him to slacken his pace.

"I suppose it was that that made me take fright," he said to himself. "I never used to have headaches. If I'm not better by to-morrow I'll take this prescription to the chemist, though I believe it's all nonsense."

A hansom driver hailed him invitingly, but he shook his head impatiently, and quickened his steps in spite of the dull throbbing that caused him to half close his eyes. It was a chilly evening and, as he turned from the quiet street into the busy thoroughfare, fleet began to fall; but instead of taking a bus he set out to walk the two miles that lay between him and his place of abode.

He arrived at his door wet and shivering.

His home was an old fashioned, neglected looking building in the neighborhood of Russell Square, and he was the sole occupant. A charwoman came for an hour every morning and made a pretense of cleaning up generally, although her work consisted chiefly of removing the ashes of the parlor grate in winter and washing the dishes which the master had soiled the previous day. He placed both in the hall for she was not admitted to the parlor. John Breen did his own cooking, such as it was, at the sitting room fire, and his bed consisted of the sofa and a travelling rug in the same apartment. The other rooms, eight in number, of the house were unfurnished.

On entering the hall, which echoed his steps, he locked and bolted the door with exceeding care, and made his way in the dark to the parlor situated on the same floor. It was necessary to unlock the parlor door, and having done so he entered and locked it again behind him. The inside of the door was covered with sheet iron, and fitted with heavy bolts fitted into sockets at top and bottom.

The fire, under a layer of dross, glowed faintly, and was slow to ignite the spill of paper that he presented between the bars. When he did procure a light he applied it to a candle on the mantelpiece, and in its glimmer he beheld his face in a dirty mirror.

"Yes," he muttered, "If I'm not better by tomorrow I'll go to the chemist. I can't afford to be ill. I'm glad I did not go to a doctor close at hand. He might have found out who I was and insisted on attending me. How my head aches!"

He sat down in the worn out easy chair and inserted a few slips of wood between the bars of the grate. Small flames pierced the blanket of dross, and presently he set a little kettle on the hottest part.

"A cup of tea will put me together," he said, suddenly. "I must lose no time or I may be too late." He rose and crossed the room to a bookcase void of books. From a lower shelf he took a loaf of bread and a cut of cheese, also a plate and knife, and carried them to the table close to the side of the easy chair.

Then suddenly he began to smile and rub his hands softly. The window shutters, iron bound like the door, were closed and bolted, but he went over and examined them and drew the faded curtains together. After that he peered into all the corners and under the sofa, smiling and fingering something in his hip pocket. John Breen was not a timid man; he was merely careful.

When he was quite satisfied that he was alone he went back to his easy chair, and, stretching out his right hand opened the panelling at the side of the fireplace, disclosing the door of a very small but apparently deep and supremely strong safe. Inserting a couple of keys, he manipulated them until the locks yielded and the stout door swung open. The safe was packed with little bags of gold, parcels of notes and bundles of negotiable securities.

The latter papers represented John Breen's capital—his father's legacy to him—the notes and gold the interest, less his trifling expenses, of nearly thirty years. The investments were as safe as the nation's credit, and the owner had never sought to alter them for others bringing a larger return. The stream of gold from them may not have satisfied him with its bulk, but at least it was steady, and he loved to mark on a calendar the days on which he would present his coupons with certainty of receiving the value printed thereon.

This very day he collected the interest represented by certain coupons, and now he brought from his breast a dark soft leather bag and poured the tinkling contents on the table—one hundred and twenty-five pounds.

He began to count the sovereigns, but somehow when he came to twenty-seven he could not proceed.

He tried again with the same result. His head ached more than ever, but he made another attempt—and failed.

"I wish the kettle would boil," he sighed, lying back wearily. "A cup of tea will put me right."

But when the kettle boiled at last he paid no attention. The throbbing which for some minutes had been almost unbearable, had abruptly ceased, and a sense of peace had descended upon John Breen.

His eyes closed, he lay unconscious, his hard features wonderfully softened. Strangely enough he dressed well, and as he lay there in the poor light of the candle and the increasing glow of the fire, which failed to make clear the poverty and wretchedness of his surroundings, he might have been taken for a well-to-do and rather handsome elderly gentleman enjoying a nap.

The kettle was dry and ruined, the fire was almost out, and the candle was within an inch of its socket, when John Breen came back to life again. He sat up feebly and looked curiously about him.

He felt no pain, but he was greatly puzzled. An expression of disgust dawned upon his face when his eye, caught sight of the bread and cheeses but being desperately hungry he cut a piece of the former and ate a portion. He was chilly, too, and felt a craving for hot food.

Then he beheld his wealth. He began to tremble violently, and tears rolled down his cheeks.

Awe stricken, he whispered to himself: "And I might have died to-night I might have died and no one, not even myself, have been the better for my having lived."

He took the notes, the bags of gold and the documents from the safe, laid them in a heap at his feet, and began to reckon his future. It was easily done, for each bag was stamped with "£500." While each bundle of securities had a slip of paper attached bearing its approximate value. Besides, he found no difficulty in counting now.

The grand total came to a few hundreds and odd over eighty thousands pounds.

"I must leave this accursed house at once," he said, suddenly. "I must lose no time or I may be too late."

Within an hour he left the house in a cab with a couple of ancient portman-teaus. In his pocket he carried a letter addressed to his charwoman, and containing instructions for her not to call until notified to do so, which he intended to put at the first opportunity. The letter also contained ten five pound notes.

It was past midnight when he reached the large hotel in Northumberland avenue—the name of which had somehow occurred to him as he stepped into the cab—but he managed to get a fairly good supper before retiring. He slept little, for he had many plans to make for the morrow. Still, he arose in the morning with nothing worse than a feeling of tiredness, which, however, seemed to affect his memory rather strangely. For instance, he could not remember where he had come from the previous night; and as the day wore on he was occasionally perplexed regarding other matters of the past. The bunch of complicated keys in his pocket puzzled him, and when he happened upon the doctor's prescription in another pocket he could not recollect the visit to the physician. Most of all, the revolver in his hip pocket troubled him. He did not know what to do with it, and he was afraid to unload it lest it be discharged. For the time being he decided to lock it in a drawer in his bedroom.

He spent the forenoon in studying the newspapers, and in the afternoon he paid a visit to the poorest quarters of the East End, returning, with a white and troubled face, to play with his dinner and to spend the evening locked in his room.

A few days later the people began to call upon him—prosperous looking gentlemen and fine ladies—and earnest conversations took place in the elegant sitting room he had engaged in addition to his bedroom. Other men and women, pinched and sad, began to watch for his coming to their miserable dwellings.

And nearly three months went past.

One evening toward the end of May Mr. Breen gave a little dinner party in his private sitting room. Ten ladies and gentlemen, all keenly interested in philanthropic work, were present, and even those of them who were high in the land treated their gentle faces with unfeigned respect and seemed to regard him with sincere affection as well as admiration. Although the weather had unexpectedly become oppressively hot the spirits of the guests did not suffer depression. Only the host appeared somewhat wearied when the dinner itself being over, the time came for him to explain a new scheme of charity which he had lately been deeply considering, and which all present were eager to hear about.

"I must ask you to pardon my leaving you for a moment, my friends," he said, suddenly. "I find I have left my notes on the scheme in my room."

With a word of thanks for the permission readily granted, and a pleasant smile to all, Mr. Breen left the room.

"He is a wonderful man," remarked a countess. "Is it really the case that he has given forty thousand pounds to the children's hospital in White-chapel?"

"He handed the money to us yesterday," said an old man, with kindly twinkling eyes. "And it was only a first instalment, he assured me. But he has made so many magnificent gifts recently that one fears he must soon exhaust himself. Truly it was Providence that allowed John Breen to become a rich man."

"He ought to be Sir John at least," said a pretty woman, "though I fancy he would scorn a title."

Meantime Mr. Breen was in his bedroom, searching for the slips of paper on which he had set down the details of his scheme.

He could not remember where he had put them. Drawer after drawer he tried without success. As he drew upon the last drawer a vivid flash of lightning lit up the chamber—he had not thought it necessary to switch on the electric light, as he had sufficient light from the open door—and almost immediately a terrific peal crashed overhead.

John Breen's fingers closed on something in the drawer, and presently a look of amazement overpread his countenance.

The philanthropists waited in vain for his reappearance.

Drenched to the skin, he sat in his draggled evening clothes, staring at the empty safe, a creature of utter despair. He had a faint glimmering that he had given away his wealth, but to whom he could not remember. He tried very hard to remember.

The glimmering went out, and he could not remember anything at all. He only knew that he had no money left.

No money left? He searched his pockets and found a few notes and some change. Thirty pounds odd.

Also a revolver.

The surgeon who examined him afterward directed a colleague's attention to the scar on his right temple.

"Yes," said the colleague, "it might have something to do with the case, though he might have got the smash a long time ago."

He referred, of course, to the case of suicide.

But which was the real John Breen—the miser or the philanthropist?

A Failure?

Is Christianity a failure? Yes, in the sense that it has not yet succeeded in creating a people so superior in all things to heathen nations as to give to our religion the position of an absolute revelation of righteousness and truth. Notwithstanding the claims urged by enthusiastic preachers and lecturers of the last century, our closer contact with foreign people and a deeper knowledge their beliefs is constantly making us more modest and cautious in our statements and claims. Once more we must answer yes, if we are to measure the success of Christianity by its creation of a devout and worshipping people. Its churches are not as full of trusting masses as formerly.

Whether this is a permanent tide or not remains to be seen. An absolute and successful religion should, after having had the field entirely to itself for several generations, have impressed itself so completely on the lives and feelings of the populace as to make them harmonious and sympathetic in its support. There is something the matter when a religion comes with supernatural claims, and fails to command devout attention of the community. In answering the question propounded, we must admit that the sacred Book, as a permanent cornerstone of church structure, is disallowed. The Bible is probably gaining power as literature, but it has lost its position as the accurate and indubitable word of God. At the same time there is no room to doubt the waning of ecclesiastical power. While this is granted, it is not to be lamented. The influence of the ministry seems to be going through an off-clearing, from absolutism to a position held strictly on the basis of moral and intellectual capacity. The modern minister must be the most modern man in the community, not in the sense of being the most bold and radical, but the frankest, manliest, sincerest, and truest to his convictions. He must know how to let go of that which is disproved without losing his hold upon the greater and fundamental principles of rightness in thought and action.

Nor can the question propounded be answered unless we take into consideration very frankly the fact that the old fundamental doctrines, which were supposed to constitute and make up Christianity, have lapsed. Not only has the huge Calvinistic structure totally collapsed, but there is nothing in modern life that is fairly represented by the Athanasian Creed or the Creed of the Apostles. These things, if kept in form before the churches, cannot be kept in life. What people really believe in nowadays is the continuous revelation of God in human life and the fortunes of the world. People no longer go back for their religious theories to the ages which believed that the world was created out of nothing, after which the Creator sat down to rest. They have no more reason for holding these notions of antiquity than they have for going back of Galileo and Kepler for their astronomy. The outlook is toward scientific verity, the verifiable facts which have come with such volume since Franklin's kite went up and met the lightning. The age of electricity has something to say about the way Elijah died and left his mantle for Elisha.

But, when we have gone thus far in our estimate of Christianity, we have still to reckon on one feature of modern religion which cannot be carelessly overlooked. The secret of Christianity today is the universal conscience which has grown up alongside the universal consciousness and finds its cosmopolitan expression in the Golden Rule. At the same time the universal moral sentiment heartily approves of Jesus as the supremest of our religious leaders.—Christian Register.

"See how I can count, mamma!" said Kitty. "There's my right foot. That's one. There's my left foot. That's two. Two and one makes three. Three feet one yard, and I want to go out and play in it."—Detroit News Tribune.

Do We Need a Great Navy?

With her boundless wealth and vast population, with her inexhaustible supplies of food, of coal, and of iron, with the amazing alertness and ingenuity of her citizens in swiftly producing and skillfully employing everything necessary for warlike purposes, America is the most formidable antagonist that any power could have. No country could hope to gain anything by a war with her. None could strike at a vital point. None could wrest anything from her that she now possesses. If her enemy were able to blockade her coasts she would doubtless suffer by the temporary interruption of commerce. But her home market is far more important than her foreign market, and she has at home almost everything that she needs. The only antagonist that could attempt such a blockade would be Great Britain, and the eventuality of a war between America and Britain may be dismissed as outside the range of present practical politics, not merely for sentimental reasons, but also for other reasons of the strongest cogency.

It is sometimes said that the United States needs a great navy in order to maintain its ascendancy in the western hemisphere. As for the republics of Central and South America, a few battleships and some gunboats would be amply sufficient to chastise them should they infringe, as they have sometimes seemed likely to do, the rights of American citizens, while the idea that any European power will attempt to acquire territories on the South American continent, though one finds it treated seriously by a few American publicists, seems to a European observer chimerical. Whether a German or French colony established in Brazil—to take the instance sometimes supposed—could injure or could even cause disquiet to the United States need not be discussed, for it is certain that neither Germany nor France would attempt to establish a colony against the wish of the United States.

But the United States has now, so it will be said, entered on a new line of policy as an ocean power. She holds territories in the West Indies, in Hawaii, in the Philippines, which can only be defended by a navy. Who is going to attack her? Who could attack her? Americans themselves do not seem to realize the full strength of their strategic position nor how true it is that in a naval war victory must ultimately go to the nation which commands the largest resources. Even assuming courage and science to be equal the power which can raise revenue most easily and quickly is certain to prevail, and to such a power the momentary loss of control of a part of the sea or of an island would be a matter of small consequence, because being sure to come out winner in the end, she would recover everything. It is sometimes argued that America needs a great navy in order to expand her foreign trade and become a great exporting country. This object will be most directly attained, not by spending more on unproductive purposes in quadrupling her navy, but by lowering the present protective tariff.—James Bryce in Independent.

Those who imagine that the limelight of the world's attention will be turned away from President Roosevelt, now that the war in the Far East is over, are likely to find themselves mistaken. The hour is near at hand for the fulfillment of his promise to call together the powers in a second conference at The Hague. It may be remembered that when the Interparliamentary Congress met in the United States a year ago, it adopted a resolution which pointed out that the International Peace Congress of 1809 had fallen far short of accomplishing its purpose, and went on to express the hope that a second conference of the kind, which the American Chief Magistrate was requested to convocate might prove more successful. In his reply to the resolution, however, Mr. Roosevelt said that at an early date he would ask foreign governments to join in a second congress at The Hague, in order that the work done in 1899 might be resumed and carried forward.

News of the Week

Boston, Sept. 21.—The police of Winthrop and the Medical Examiner Francis A. Harris, of this city, were called upon, tonight, to investigate the death of a woman, whose dismembered body was found in a suit case in the water near the Winthrop Yacht Club house. There were no marks by which the remains could be readily identified.

The medical examiner found two long cuts on the body and from these and other circumstances, the authorities are of the belief that the woman was the victim of an operation.

Boston, Sept. 22.—The police of Winthrop, Boston and the State are giving their combined efforts in an attempt to unravel the mystery which surrounds the crime discovered yesterday by the finding of the dismembered trunk of a woman in a dress suit case floating in the water off the Winthrop Yacht club's pier. Officers were at work on the case for several hours during the night but learned nothing that might lead to a clue. The Boston police are searching the city in the hope of locating the missing woman, as they are of the opinion that the crime was committed here. The police of Winthrop state that the victim was probably not of that town as they know of no one missing.

Paris, Sept. 26.—Admiral Fournier in the course of an interview published to-day, says the British naval station at Singapore gives a strategic base sufficient to absolutely prevent the passage of naval forces within the China sea and is capable of suppressing commercial communication between China and Europe.

Thus Singapore becomes Great Britain's key to the door of the China sea.

Port Said, Sept. 26.—A serious stoppage of the traffic of the Suez canal is threatening owing to the necessity of blowing up the British steamer Chatham which was sunk on September 6, owing to the fact that she was on fire and that the flames threatened to reach a quantity of dynamite which formed part of her cargo. Since that time, the wreck has obstructed the waterway, especially at night as the wreck is submerged. Divers, tomorrow, will place cases of blasting gelatine in the hold of the Chatham, these will be connected with an electric battery ashore and the eighty tons of dynamite in the wreck will be exploded Thursday morning.

An expert from the Mobil Co., who was conducting the operations, says it is impossible to predict the amount of mischief which will ensue from the great upheaval or to what extent traffic will be impeded. He says there is no precedent to show the effect of the explosion of such an amount of dynamite. It may conceivably form a crater in the bed of the canal in which the wreckage may be buried, leaving the canal deeper than before.

The Suez Canal Co. declares it is impossible to estimate the length of time the canal will be blocked but the company's experts are confident it will only be a matter of a few days.

Chicago, Sept. 25.—The era of the "self-made" man is on the wane. Efficiency can no longer be manufactured or home made. Competition of the present day is too much for the self-made man. So holds Professor Nathaniel Butler, principal of the school of education department of the University of Chicago, who spoke yesterday at the closing session of the Twentieth annual convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrews in Mandell Hall at the University of Chicago. The subject of his address was "Education as a factor of efficient manhood." Prof. Butler spoke in the place of President Wm. R. Harper, who was too ill to attend the session. "The term 'self made man' is a mere fallacy," Prof. Butler declared. "The 'self made' man's success is due only to unusual ability. Efficient manhood, the manhood that ought to be offered to his great office in behalf of decency. The vital and important thing lies in the change which he has brought in the attitude of young men toward political life.

"The time is not long past when it was not considered respectable to go into politics. I hope the time is not far distant when it won't be respectable not to be in politics. When this time comes, this country will do things in the world that never were done before."

Potato Market is Better

New York, Sept. 22.—There is a stronger and better feeling on potatoes than last week. Buyers are very particular to examine everything closely because the muggy warm weather has a tendency to make everything rot quickly. Two weeks ago there was a good deal of rot in Long Island potatoes but early in the week they commenced to get better. The wet weather the middle of the week will start them to rotting again and they are likely to give dissatisfaction.

Rot in New York.

Up state stock is not plentiful and it is just as well. There were a few cars which brought $1.75 at the extreme and some of them as low as $1.62. These potatoes did not show any rot, although they were green. In the extreme northern part of the state, along the Canadian line, there is much complaint of rot and these goods when they come to the market will show up badly.

It now looks as though there will be a glut of potatoes, but not such a glut as to cause low prices. No one anticipates a winter market below $2. Should the rot and blight over the country get worse with a warm fall the better stock would go above $2. When this occurs foreign stock will come freely. Already shippers of foreign potatoes are inquiring what the winter market will be, with a view of consigning.

There were a few Maines, on the market this week, but not enough to make a price. The stock is fairly good, although not quite as matured as it should be.

Thus far no Michigans have reached this market. The early crop in that state is going west at fairly good prices. Reports here show that Michigan will have a good crop of potatoes free from rot and blight.

The Maine Potato Situation.

Fort Fairfield, Me., Sept. 19.—The quality of Aroostook county potatoes was never better than this fall. Not a rotten potato is to be found in a thousand barrels. The size is medium and owing to the dry weather come out of the ground clean and nice, ready for shipping. Starch factories are paying 30c per barrel. These factories will begin grinding in a few days.

Said one Caribou dealer: "I am putting every spare dollar into potatoes this year, and I consider them at $1 a barrel a very good investment."

New York state's rot and blight will materially help the Aroostook demand and in all probability there will be a $1.25 price within six weeks. The yield is from 50 to 80 barrels per acre, or about two thirds of a normal crop. The quality, however, is better than for several years.

CALIFORNIA LOW RATES

TO THE LAND of SUNSHINE and no WINTER Autumn Excursion October, 30 '05 Tourist Sleeping Cars From Maine to California

I have arranged for a tourist sleeper to be placed at Houlton to accommodate those in this vicinity and at points along the Canadian Pacific and Bangor and Aroostook Ry's., who have advised me of their desire to visit California. The railroads have made very low rates and we propose to take full advantage of them.

This sleeper will be attached to the train leaving Houlton via the Canadian Pacific Ry. at 4.40 p. m. (Eastern time) Monday Oct. 30.

Passengers from points on the Canadian Pacific north of Houlton, will leave as per following schedule (Eastern time) and take the sleeper at Debec Junction. Leave Edmundston at 11.30 a. m.; Grand Falls at 1.03 p. m.; Presque Isle at 11.40 a. m.; Caribou 12.15 p. m.; Fort Fairfield 12.47 p. m.; Bristol 3.15 p. m.; Hartland 3.52 p. m.; Woodstock 4.35 p. m.

Passengers from points on the Bangor and Aroostook will leave as per following schedule and take sleepers at Greenville. Van Buren 9.10 a. m.; Caribou 12.10 p. m.; Presque Isle 12.38 p. m.; Fort Fairfield 11.30 a. m.; Bridgewater 1.25 p. m.; Ashland 1.05 p. m.

For The Information of those living at other points the train with this tourist sleeper will leave McAdam Jct. 7.10 p. m., Greenville Jct. 11.22 p. m.

The Route will be Canadian Pacific to Detroit; Wabash R. R. to Chicago, thence Chicago and North Western, Union Pacific, and Southern Pacific, to San Francisco, Fresno, Santa Barbara, Los Angeles and other California points.

Railroad Fare from Presque Isle, Caribou and Fort Fairfield $59.75; Houlton and Woodstock $58.05; Edmundston $59.85; McAdam Jct. $56.40. Fares from other points will be quoted on application.

Children under 5 years free, between 5 and 12 half fare over 12 full fare. Round trip railroad rates will be given if any desire.

Baggage 150 lbs. free with each full ticket, 75 lbs. with each half ticket. Baggage will be checked through to California points.

Sleeping Car Rates—One berth $10.75 through to San Francisco, Fresno, Los Angeles and all California points on line of railroad traversed. Each berth will accommodate two adults and they can divide amount if desired.

To all starting from this section the many advantages of this through sleeping car service must be apparent. Economy as well as comfort is secured. No delays involving hotel expenses; no charges for transfer of baggage, etc., at any point. Comfort and health very essential to maintain in such a change from one climate to another is secured by the rest and home surroundings these sleepers afford. These sleepers are equipped with separate toilet rooms for ladies and gentlemen towels, mirrors and the berths are provided with mattresses, sheets, pillows and blankets. A porter is in constant attendance. Each section is provided with a table which can be used for meals, reading or writing. At all stations enroute passengers are free from annoyances from crowds passing through either night or day as the Pullman porter bars the entrance to all not having sleeping car tickets for this car.

The Capacity of Sleeping Cars Being Limited, it is important I receive your application at the earliest date possible, both that you may be sure of the space you want and I may know upon what to rely.

Each application should be accompanied with a Check, Express or P. O. Money Order for the amount of space you order at the rate of $10.75 a berth. Send your application with check or order, payable to me. State plainly your destination in California, how much space you want in sleeper, one berth or more, or a section, (a section is upper and lower berth) also how many railroad tickets you require. In reply you will receive an acknowledgement for your remittance which will entitle you to the space order at point where you take the sleeper.

Railroad Tickets. These you will purchase of your home ticket agent who will also see that your baggage is checked through to California destination.

Meals. Most prefer to carry their lunches which can be replenished at points enroute. Meals can be had at excellent dining station or in dining cars, if desired.

Personally Conducted. This special tourist sleeper will be accompanied by an experienced railroad official from Houlton to California. This will relieve all worry incident to such a long journey when taken alone, also afford opportunity to learn about points of interest from one familiar with travel "across the continent."

If for any special reasons you desire an interview I will have a representative call upon you.

If you have any household goods or other freight to ship kindly advise me approximate weight and kind of goods if other than household, and I will arrange at a low rate either for a carload or less. My first car of Houlton people and their friends is nearly full. Applications for berths should be made at once.

I shall also be pleased to hear from parties who demand the luxurious appointments and comforts of a first class palace sleeper and to whom expense is a secondary consideration. There are several such now planning to go to California for the winter. And I would like to hear from others who wish to join a palace sleeper party address

The Stein-Bloch Wool Test

The Stein-Bloch Wool Test consists of a boiling solution of water and caustic potash, the chemical action of which dissolves wool but not cotton. The two samples here shown were originally of the same length, the test proved one to be all wool, consuming the part immersed and leaving only the blue stained edge. The other proved to be an adulteration containing a large per cent of mercerized cotton.

Mr. Percy E. Gilbert is in town for a few days. It will be remembered that Mr. Gilbert was a former teacher at Ricker. He expects to graduate from the Bowdoin Medical College the coming year, and will soon be looking for a location. We wish him success and with his thorough preparation and zeal for his chosen profession he deserves to succeed.

The South Aroostook Teachers' Association will be held in the High School building, Houlton, Oct. 6 and 7. The speakers from away will be Hon. W. W. Weston, Prof. Mitchell of Bowdoin, and Prof. G. C. Purington of Farmington. Those desiring entertainment will, please inform G. C. Purington Jr. of Houlton, before Oct. 3. A good program has been prepared and an interesting session is confidently expected. All interested in education should attend.

The strike at the county wood yard was of short duration. It started on Friday morning of last week on account of a change in the working hours—a ten hour day being demanded instead of 7 hours. The prisoners rebelled and were returned to their cells on a bread and water ration without tobacco. This continued until Sunday noon when they sent a message to those in authority to the effect that the strike was declared off and they were ready and willing to go to work again. The diet was changed to something more substantial and on Monday morning more than twenty "hunks" turned out to push the buck saw.

To a portion of our readers who are accustomed each week to look for a large quantity of new reading matter in their weekly newspaper we are obliged to say that "ye, poor editor" has to live along with others in the community and the advertising columns of his paper contribute very largely to his sustenance, therefore his countenance is wreathed in smiles when the advertiser "take a brace" and make him labor diligently in setting forth the merits of their wares in cold, hard type. This week the advertisers have been generous with us and although we much regret the omission of a great deal of interesting reading matter, we will endeavor to check the flow of our tears for a more solemn occasion and will look into the future with much pleasure at the increased amount of nourishing edibles which are to grace our festive board. Incidentally we would say to our readers that the advertising in this issue is all new, fresh and up-to-date and it will repay you to scan the advertising columns as closely as the solid reading.

Potato digging is rapidly drawing to a close and satisfaction is being expressed on all sides at the yield and particularly the quality of the potatoes. Not in the history of Aroostook has there been a season when the quality of the potato exceeded or even equaled the crop of 1905. This fact will have a great effect in making a large demand for Aroostook potatoes. In regard to the yield there are fields that are only producing 40 and 50 barrels to the acre but these are scarce; more are yielding from 60 to 80 and even 85 and 90. And a few fields have been reported where over 100 barrels are being dug—even as high as 125. Such crops as these last mentioned help swell the average.

The many friends of Mrs. Alanda Gallupe White will learn with regret of her recent passing away in Portland, Oregon. Mrs. White's girlhood was spent in Aroostook where she was beloved by all who came under the influence of her beautiful and lovable nature. She leaves a husband and three children, the eldest of whom, Don, holds a position of responsibility in Jackson, Mich. the younger son Ora is a pharmacist while Miss Rouie White, the only daughter has won distinction for herself in the world of music as a singer of ability. All three are graduates of Albion College. The loving mother's hands that led each to the beginning of a career of promise are folded and at rest, but the fearless noble spirit will live forever in the memory of those who loved her and knew her best.

News comes to us this week of a change in the clothing and gent's furnishing interests of the town. The deal is practically closed whereby the proprietorship of the Ingraham Clothing Co., heretofore managed by Frank A. Peabody, is transferred to Lee Ervin and Chas. Davenport. Mr. Ervin has been closely identified with the clothing interests of the town for several years, formerly with the above named company, and for the past two years with Clough & Taggett. Mr. Davenport has also had considerable experience in the business having also been in the employ of the above company. Both the young men are bright and shrewd business men and have a host of friends in town, and the business under their able direction should and undoubtedly will be a grand success.

The members of the Aroostook bar and Judge Strout, presiding justice at the present term of court, were very pleasantly entertained by Ira G. Mrs. John Braden who for the past few years has been in very feeble health has been obliged to take her bed and requires the services of a trained nurse.

Mrs. J. A. Tenney and young son started Wednesday morning for Searsport where they will visit Mrs. Tenney's mother, Mrs. H. B. Black for a few weeks.

Mrs. Geo. Donworth who for the past few weeks has been visiting her mother Mrs. Chas. P. Tenney returned to her home in Seattle, Wash., Monday of this week.

Moses Milton who for some time past has been in the employ of the John Watson Co. has resigned his position on account of ill health and will pass the winter in the woods.

Wednesday Sept. 20th, the King's Workers met with Mrs. Ford and reorganized and elected officers for the present year. The officers and different departments of work are president, vice president, secretary, treasurer, work and purchasing committee and visiting committee. The next meeting Oct. 4th will be with Mrs. Ford and all members are requested to attend.

John Shorey of South Presque Isle brought to this office this week twelve potatoes, dug from one hill, which weighed 8 3-4 pounds. The field from which they were taken is yielding from 160 to 175 bbls. to the acre. The average yield in the country will be far ahead of what was estimated a month ago. There are very few small potatoes and some of the starch factories will not be opened at all this season.

The September term of the Supreme Judicial Court which for the past two weeks has been in session in this town adjourned Thursday and Judge Strout left for his home in Portland. Out of the 841 actions on the docket about 300 were disposed of. The grand jury was in session but a short time and reported 22 indictments—the smallest number for some years. The case of State vs. Cyaice Damboise occupied the entire afternoon, Monday, and all day Tuesday. The respondent was charged with cruelty to a child. Some time last March a girl, 14 years of age, was brought from a charitable institution in Boston and adopted by the Damboise family in Fort Fairfield. The following June the child died from consumption. The State claims that proper treatment was not provided for her while she was with the Damboise family. The respondent was on the stand nearly the entire forenoon Tuesday and underwent a very severe cross examination. The jury after being out a short time Wednesday morning, returned a verdict of guilty. The counsel for Damboise immediately gave notice of their intentions to file exceptions and were given until Nov. 15 to do so. Bail of $500 was furnished by James H. Glenn and Parker L. Hardison of Caribou. As soon as the Damboise trial was at an end a new jury was empanelled and Joseph Legasse of Island Falls was put on trial charged with having made a criminal assault on August 8th last upon one Mary Willette of Island Falls. It appeared in evidence that on the day mentioned the girl was alone in the house when Legasse entered and after a short conversation, caught the girl by the throat, overpowered her and threw her to the floor. The case was withdrawn from the jury and Legasse retracted the plea of not guilty of criminal assault and pleaded guilty of attempted criminal assault and was sentenced to 5 years in the State prison. During the term 16 divorces were granted and 4 persons were naturalized. The next term of court will be convened at Caribou the first Tuesday of December and Judge Peabody of Portland will preside.

LOCAL NEWS.

A very pleasant social event of the week was a reception held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Hunter, 45 Franklin St., Saturday evening, Sept. 23, in honor of their fiftieth marriage anniversary. Over one hundred people gathered to pay their respects to the aged couple. The evening was passed in an enjoyable manner with occasional musical selections by the pianist, Miss May Sineck. Delicious refreshments were served and the gathering broke up at a late hour, leaving behind many beautiful and useful gifts which will be highly prized. Mr. and Mrs. Hunter were married on Sept. 23, 1855, by Leverett E. Estabrook, Esq. There has been born to them eight children: Reuben F. and Hartford S., deceased, and Frank N. and Mrs. Idella Royal of Hermon, Me.; Mr. John M., Mrs. Lucy MacDonald and Mrs. Ruby Benn of Hodgdon and George B., of Houlton, all of who were present. Mr. Hunter was an early settler of Hodgdon coming to that place at two years of age and resided there for over sixty years, moving to Houlton nearly eleven years ago. Mrs. Hunter was Miss Flora Young, a daughter of Capt. Nathaniel Young, and was born at Dover, Me., coming to Aroostook at the early age of seven. Mr. and Mrs. Hunter are held in high esteem by the communities in which they have lived and their many friends join in wishing them many added years of life and happiness.

Diphtheria in Houlton.

This terrible scourge has again made its appearance in this town. It seems that Mr. Bruce Dickson had a child die a few weeks ago, and it is reported that the children of the undertaker who attended to interring the body, were taken with the disease shortly after the child was buried. Mr. Dickson afterward moved to the Highlands. Since that the disease attacked Mrs. Wm. Perkins and the Herbert Savage family. Thursday the Alice Ives child died on the flat. We do not wish to unnecessarily alarm anyone but proper precautions should be taken and any case of sore throat should be promptly reported, and all cases should be properly looked after and quarantined.

Resolutions

Passed by the Orange on the death of J. H. Smith.

WHEREAS, Death having entered the home of our brother and removed from our midst as we believe one of the oldest residents of the town having lived here eighty or more years. He belonged to the Grange a great many years but was unable to attend much for a long time on account of failing health and at last was confined to his bed and helpless for a year.

WHEREAS, In the death of our brother the Grange has lost a true and faithful patron, the county a kind and obliging neighbor, the wife and family a kind and devoted husband and father.

RESOLVED, That we, the members of Houlton Grange No. 16, Patrons of Husbandry extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved wife and family and recommend that a copy of this be put on our records and a copy sent to the wife and family of our brother and one to the Times for publication.

CHAPTER XXVI.

THE Countess Lanovitch never quitted her own apartments before midday. She had acquired a Parisian habit of being invisible until luncheon time. The two girls left the castle of Thors in a sleigh with one attendant at 10 o'clock in order to reach the hut selected for luncheon by midday. Etta did not accompany them. She had a slight headache.

At 11 o'clock Claude de Chauville returned alone, on horseback. After the sportsmen had separated, each to gain his prearranged position in the forest, he had tripped over his rifle, seriously injuring the delicate sighting mechanism. He found (he told the servant who opened the door for him) that he had just time to return for another rifle before the operation of closing in on the bears was to begin.

"If madame the princess," was visible, he went on, would the servant tell her that M. de Chauville was waiting in the library to assure her that there was absolutely no danger to be anticipated in the day's sport. The princess, it would appear, was absurdly anxious about the welfare of her husband—an experienced hunter and a dead shot.

Claude de Chauville then went to the library, where he waited, booted, spurred, rifle in hand, for Etta.

After a lapse of five minutes or more the door was opened, and Etta came leisurely into the room.

"Well?" she inquired indifferently. De Chauville bowed. He walked past her and closed the door, which she happened to have left open.

Then he returned and stood by the window, leaning gracefully on his rifle. His attitude, his hunting suit, his great top boots, made rather a picturesque object of him.

"Well?" repeated Etta, almost insolently.

"It would have been wiser to have married me," said De Chauville darkly.

Etta shrugged her shoulders. "Because I understand you better; I know you better than your husband."

Etta turned and glanced at the clock. "Have you come back from the bear hunt to tell me this, or to avoid the bears?" she asked.

"I held you, madame," he said, "I held you in my hand. You are my

"I held you in my hand."

slave despite your brave title; my thing, my plaything, despite your servants and your great houses and your husband. When I have finished telling you all that I have to tell, you will understand. You will perhaps thank me for being merciful."

Etta laughed defiantly. "You are afraid of Paul?" she cried.

"You are afraid of Karl Steinmetz? You will presently be afraid of me!"

"I think not," said De Chauville coolly. The two names just mentioned were certainly not of pleasant import in his ears, but he was not going to let a woman know that. This man had played dangerous cards before now. He was not at all sure of his ground. He did not know what Etta's position was in regard to Steinmetz. Behind the defiant woman there lurked the broad shadow of the man who never defied, who knew many things, but was ignorant of fear.

"Karl Steinmetz is no friend of yours," he said.

Etta did not answer. She was thinking of the conversation she had had with Steinmetz in Petersburg. She was wondering whether the friendship he had offered—the solid thing, as he called it—was not better than the love of this man.

"I have information now," went on De Chauville, "which would have made you my wife had I had it sooner."

"I think not," said the lady insolently. She had dealt with such men before. Hers was the beauty that appealed to De Chauville and such as he. It is not the beautiful women who see the best side of human nature.

"Even now," went on the Frenchman, "now that I know you, I still love you. You are the only woman I shall ever love."

"Indeed?" murmured the lady, quite unmoved.

"Yes, although in a way I despise you, now that I know you."

"Mon Dieu!" exclaimed Etta. "If you have anything to say, please say it. I have no time to probe your mysteries, to discover your parables. You know me well enough, perhaps, to be aware that I am not to be frightened by your cheap charlatanism."

"I know you well enough," retorted De Chauville hoarsely, "to be aware that it was you who sold the Charity league papers to Vassil in Paris. I know you well enough, madame, to be aware of your present position in regard to your husband. If I say a word in the right quarter you would never leave Russia alive. I have merely to say to Catrina Lanovitch that it was you who banished her father for your own gain. I have merely to hand your name in to certain of the Charity league party, and even your husband could not save you."

He had gradually approached her and uttered the last words face to face, his eyes close to hers. She held her head up—erect, defiant still.

"So you see, madame," he said, "you belong to me."

She smiled. "Hand and foot," he added. "But I am soft hearted."

He shrugged his shoulders and turned away.

"What will you?" he said, looking out of the window. "I love you."

"Nonsense!" He turned slowly around.

"What?"

"Nonsense!" repeated Etta. "You love power. You are a bully. You love to please your own vanity by thinking that you have me in your power. I am not afraid of you."

De Chauville leaned gracefully against the window. He still held his rifle.

"Reflect a little," he said, with a cold smile. "It would appear that you do not quite realize the situation. Women rarely realize situations in time. Our friend—your husband—has many of the English idiosyncrasies. He has all the narrow minded notions of honor which obtain in that country. Added to this, I suspect him of possessing a truly Slavonic fire which he keeps under. A smoldering fire—You know, madame, our French proverb."

"What do you want?" interrupted Etta. "Money?"

"I am not a needy adventurer."

"And I am not such a fool, M. de Chauville, as to allow myself to be dragged into a vulgar intrigue, borrowed from a French novel, to satisfy your vanity."

De Chauville's dull eyes suddenly flashed.

"I will trouble you to believe, madame," he said in a low, concentrated voice, "that such a thought never entered my head. A De Chauville is not a commercial traveler, if you please. No; it may surprise you, but my feeling for you has more good in it than you would seem capable of inspiring. God only knows how it is that a bad woman can inspire a good love."

"Then what do you want?" she asked.

"In the meantime, implicit obedience."

"What are you going to use me for?"

"I have ends," replied Claude de Chauville, who had regained his usual half mocking composure, "that you will serve. But they will be your ends as well as mine. You will profit by them. I will take very good care that you come to no harm, for you are the ultimate object of all this. At the end of it all I see only—you."

"What if I refuse?" asked Etta, keenly aware of the fact that this man was handicapped by his love for her.

"Then I will force you to obedience."

Etta raised her delicate eyebrows insolently.

"Ah!"

"Yes," said De Chauville, with suppressed anger, "I will force you to obey me."

The princess looked at him with her little mocking smile. "You have a strange way of proving the truth of your own statements."

"What statements?"

She gave a little laugh. Her attitude, her glance, the cunning display of a perfect figure, the laugh, the whole woman, was the incarnation of practiced coquetry. She did not admit even to herself that she was afraid of De Chauville, but she was playing her best cards in her best manner. She had never known them fail.

Claude de Chauville was a little white about the lips. His eyelids flickered, but by an effort he controlled himself, and she did not see the light in his eyes for which she looked.

"If you mean," he said coolly, "the statement that I made to you before you were married, namely, that I love you—I am quite content to leave it to proof till the future. I know what I am about, madame."

He took his watch from his pocket and consulted it.

"I must go in five minutes," he said, "I have a few instructions to give you, to which I must beg your careful attention."

He looked up, meeting Etta's somewhat averted gaze with a smile of triumph.

"It is essential," he went on, "that I be invited to Osterno. I do not want to stay there long, indeed, I do not care to. But I must see the place. I dare say you can compass the invitation, madame?"

"It will be difficult."

"And therefore worthy of your endeavor. I have the greatest regard for your diplomatic skill. I leave the matter in your hands, princess."

Etta shrugged her shoulders and looked past him out of the window. De Chauville was considering her face carefully.

"Another point to be remembered," he went on, "is your husband's daily life at Osterno. The prince is not above suspicion. He is suspected of propagating revolutionary ideas among the peasantry. I should like you to find out as much as you can. Perhaps you know already. Perhaps he has told you, princess. I know that beautiful face. He has told you. Good. Does he take an interest in the peasants?"

Etta did not answer.

"Kindly give me your attention, madame. Does the prince take an interest in the peasants?"

"Yes."

"An active interest?"

"Yes."

"Have you any details?"

"No," answered Etta.

"Then you will watch him and procure those details."

Etta's face was defiant and pale. De Chauville never took his eyes from it.

"I have undertaken a few small commissions for an old friend of yours, M. Vassil, whom you obliged once before," he said, and the defiance faded from her eyes.

"The authorities cannot in these disturbed times afford to tolerate princes of an independent turn of mind. Such men are apt to make the peasant think himself more important than he is. I dare say, madame, that you are already tired of Russia. It might perhaps serve your ends if this country was made a little too hot for your husband, eh? I see your proud lips quivering, princess! It is well to keep the lips under control. We, who deal in diplomacy, know where to look for such signs. Yes, I dare say I can get you out of Russia—forever. But you must be obedient. You must reconcile yourself to the knowledge that you have met your master."

He bowed in his graceful way, spreading out his hands in mock humility.

"A lenient master," pursued the Frenchman, whose vanity was tickled by the word, "I do not ask much. One thing is to be invited to Osterno that I may be near you. The other is a humble request for details of your daily life, that I may think of you when absent."

Etta drew in her lips, moistening them as if they had suddenly become parched.

De Chauville glanced at her and moved toward the door. He paused, with his fingers on the handle, and looking back over his shoulder, he said:

"Have I made myself quite clear?"

Etta was still looking out of the window with hard, angry eyes. She took no notice of the question.

De Chauville turned the handle.

"Again let me impress upon you the advisability of implicit obedience," he said, with delicate insolence. "I mentioned the Charity league, but that is not my strongest claim upon your attention. I have another interesting little detail of your life, which I will re-serve until another time."

He closed the door behind him, leaving Etta white lipped.

No cocoa equals Lowney's in strength. Some are blacker — colored chemically — but inferior in real strength.
Lowney's Cocoa is not loaded with ground cocoas-shells, flour, starch, or other adulterants.

It consists of nothing but the choicest cocoa beans ground to flour fineness.

The result is the most delicious, purest and finest flavored cocoa possible.

Such cocoa as Lowney's, if made abroad and duties paid, would cost double the Lowney price.

Libel For Divorce.

To the Hon. Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court next to be held at Caribou in the County of Aroostook and
State of Maine.

Alice A. Parks of Bridgewater in said county of Aroostook, respectfully represents that on the 11th day of April, 1901, at Malden, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, she was lawfully married to Allen Edward Parks, then of said Malden but whose present residence is unknown to your libellant and cannot be ascertained by reasonable diligence that ever since said time she has conducted herself towards said Libellee as a faithful, true and affectionate wife but that said Libellee, regardless of his marriage covenant and duty, on the day of September, 1901, utterly deserted your Libellant, without cause, and that said desertion has continued to the present time, being more than three years, during which time he has contributed nothing to her support. And your libellant further shows that she has had by said Libellee one child aged three years named Lewis H. Parks. And your libellant further shows that she has resided in said Aroostook County in good faith for one year prior to the commencement of these proceedings for divorce.

That your libellant has made diligent inquiry
but that the residence of said Libellee is unknown to your libellant, and cannot be ascertained by reasonable diligence. That there is no collusion between them to obtain a divorce, but that your libellant believes that said bonds of matrimony ought to be dissolved, wherefore she prays that a divorce may be decreed.

And your libellant further prays that she may have the custody of their minor child as above named.

ALICE A. PARKS.

Signed and sworn to before me this 5th day of September 1905.

IRVING G. HERSEY, Justice of the Peace,
Aroostook, ss. Supreme Judicial Court.
In Vacation, Sept. 13, Term, 1905.

In this action it is ordered by the court that notice be given and libellee, by publishing the libel and this order of court three successive weeks in the Aroostook Times, a newspaper published at Houlton in said county of Aroostook, the last publication to be at least 30 days before the next term of this court in said county of Aroostook to be held in Caribou in said county, on first Tuesday of December, 1905; that he may then and there appear and defend if he sees fit.

County Road in Linneus and Hodgdon.

To the Hon. County Commissioners for the County of Aroostook:

We, the undersigned citizens of the Towns of Hodgdon and Linneus, would respectfully represent that public convenience and necessity requires the location of a public road or way as follows:—Beginning in the center of the Maine Military road at a point where the west line of the Town of Hodgdon intersects said road; thence running southerly to or near said town line to the road in said Town of Hodgdon to Hodgdon to Linneus near the south east corner of lot numbered Four,
Range One in the Town of Linneus.

And we ask you to view the same and locate the said way at your earliest convenience.

June 1905.

E. B. PORTER, and 34 others.

STATE OF MAINE.

ARROSTOOK, ss. Court of County Com'rs.
September Term held Sept. 5, 1905.

Upon the foregoing petition it is adjudged that the petitioners are responsible persons, and we, the County Commissioners, are of the opinion that there ought to be a hearing thereon, it is thereupon

Ordered, that the Commissioners will meet on Wednesday, Nov. 15, 1905, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at the dwelling house of Mrs. Eva Porter in Hodgdon, in said Aroostook County, and hear all parties interested in said way, and after said hearing proceed to view the route above described, and there or at some convenient place in the vicinity hear all parties interested immediately after said view. Said notice to be given by posting up attested copies of said petition and this order in three public places in said Town of Linneus and also in said Town of Hodgdon, and by serving one upon the clerk of said Town of Linneus, and also upon the clerk of said Town of Hodgdon, and by publishing the same three successive weeks in the Aroostook Times, a newspaper printed and published at Houlton, in said County, the last publication and said service and posting to be at least thirty days before said meeting that all parties interested may then and there attend and be heard if they see fit.

or Bladder disease not beyond the reach of medicine. No medicine can do more.

FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE

strengthens the urinary organs, builds up the kidneys and invigorates the whole system.

IT IS GUARANTEED

TWO SIZES 50c and $1.00

Passed Stone and Gravel With Excruciating Pains

A. H. Thurnes, Mgr. Wills Creek Coal Co., Buffalo, O., writes:
"I have been afflicted with kidney and bladder trouble for years, passing gravel or stones with excruciating pains. Other medicines only gave relief. After taking FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE the result was surprising. A few doses started the brick dust, like fine stones, etc., and now I have no pain across my kidneys and I feel like a new man.
FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE has done me $1,000 worth of good."

No Other Remedy Can Compare With It

Thos. W. Carter, of Ashboro, N. C., had Kidney Trouble and one bottle of FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE effected a perfect cure, and he says there is no remedy that will compare with it.
